17 Greek tourists and an Egyptian murdered in Cairo

Gunmen thought to be Moslem militants killed 17 Greek tourists and an Egyptian man in an attack outside Cairo's Europe hotel. Fifteen others were wounded. There was no immediate claim of responsibility but the gunmen are thought to be members of the Gama'a al-Islamiya, a group of militants who have killed 25 people and wounded 73 others, mostly tourists, in the last four years. Bundesbank makes surprise rate cut

Half-point reduction expected to boost European growth

By Andrew Fisher in Frankfurt

The Bundesbank yesterday cut German short-term interest rates by a further half percentage point, in a move which came sooner than expected and should help stimulate economic growth throughout western Europe. The cuts in tha discount and

Lombard rates - representing the floor and ceiling for money mar-ket rates - to 2.5 per cent and 4.5 per cent came a day after tha International Monetary Fund called on the German central bank to do so.

Mr Theo Waigel, the Germanfinance minister, welcomed the cuts as supporting the govern-ment's efforts to stimulate economic growth. Mr Gunter with yields on benchmark two-Rexrodt, economics minister, said the move supported Bonn's plans to cut public spending and also recognised the trend towards lower pay settlements.

The reductions brought the discount and Lombard rates back to in spite of fresh indications of very high money supply growth.

The rate cut boosted German government bond prices only slightly with yields on the 10-

their record lows, last reached more than eight years ago, and many economists expect them to stay there until 1997. They came year banchmark government bond falling from 6.46 to 6.45 per cent. German shorter-dated securities performed more strongly year paper falling by 12 basis

In heavy trading in London, bond and money market futures also gained ground, with tha Juna three-month curomark con-tract settling at 96.84, up 0.06. The cut had relatively little impact on equities trading. In Frankfurt the DAX index closed at 2,535.2, up 15.52. In the currency markets the D-Mark lost some ground against the dollar. Other countries which link their currencies to the D-Mark also cut rates. Austria, Denmark, Belgium and the Netherlands lowered key interest rates by half a point, France and Switzerland, how-ever, kept rates unchanged.

Although German rate cuts had been expected, many economists thought they would come next month. Rapid growth in the money supply and the recovery in the dollar against the D-Mark. which helps exporters, were cited as arguments against a rate cut at this stage.

Reaffirming the Bundesbank's commitment to the M3 money supply indicator as its main monetary yardstick, Mr Hans Tietmeyer, president of the Bundes-bank, said recent overshooting of the 1996 target did not invalidate this. M3 was expected to grow more slowly in coming months. The bank yesterday said M3 grew at an annualised rate of 12.2 per cent in March after 12.8 per cent in February, based on the level in the fourth quarter of tary side." Mr Tietmeyer said. Bundesbank did not "slav-1995. This compares with a 1996 target range of 4-7 per cent. Peres regrets deaths of 75 civilians in UN compound as world condemnation grows

Israel vows to continue shelling Lebanon

By Julian Ozanne in Jerusi and David Gardner in Beirut

A defiant Israel yesterday vowed to continue its devastating bombardment of Lebanon in spite of condemnation of Israel's shelling which killed at least 75 Lebanese civilians, many of them women and children, sheltering in a United Nations compound.

Mr Shimon Peres, prime minister, said he regretted Israel's shelling of the headquarters of Fijian peacekeepers in Lebanon, but put the blame on pro-Iranian Hizbollah guerrillas who had fired rockets from a position near the UN base minutes before Israel's attack.

Mr Peres, who appeared angry, said Israel was not "bloodthirsty" and it had the right to defend itself against attacks by Hizbollah. If Lebanon wanted to end the violence, he said, it should heed peace negotiations. Ahead of an emergency cabinet meeting last night Mr Ehud Barak, foreign minister, said Israel was determined to continue its offensive against the guerrillas. "I estimate [it will continue for at least a few days but it's impossible to put a limit on it. It could take a week or 10 days," he said, conceding that the incident "will intensify the criticism among world opinion". France said it deplored the killing and wounding of Lebanese people and the wounding of Fifian peacakeepers who were pound, President Jacoues Chirac and US President Bill Clinton called for an immediate ceasefire. Jordan'a King Hussein condemned the attack as "criminal". Mr Rafiq al-Hariri, Lebanon's

Paris to announce $27bn debt refinancing

By Samer Iskandar in London

The French Treasury yesterday started a bidding process among leading banks and other financial institutions for the refinancing of FF140bn ($27,4bn) of social security debts. The money, which represents 27 per cent of what the French state borrows in a full year, has to be raised in the next six weeks, posing a big financial challenge for the participating institutions.

The amount involved will require recourse to all available sources of finance, including the domestic and international bond markets, as well as the money markets and syndicated bank

The governi announce the structure of the refinancing in the first two weeks of May and simultaneously launch the first tranche of the deal, which is likely to be a French franc bond issue.

The Treasury began informal consultations earlier this year on the restructuring with around 25 French and international banks and primary dealers in French

Anglo American may face charges over miners' deaths

By Mark Ashurst in Johannesburg

A judicial inquiry yesterday said Anglo American Corporation, South Africa's biggest company, should be charged with the culpable homicide of 104 miners killed in an accident at its Vaal Reef gold mine last May.

The inquiry is the first to recommend that a South African mining company be held liable for a fatal accident.

It was welcomed as "a landmark finding" by the African National Congress, the main party in the government. The report containing the recommendation has been presented to the attorney-general of

Gauteng province centred on

Johannesburg, who will decide whether to initiate criminal proceedings. On May 10 an underground locomotive plunged down a mine shaft and collided with a cage carrying the miners. Mr Justice Ramon Leon, who headed the inquiry, said the deaths were attributable to a series of events cian at the mine had known of caused by negligence.

The report challenges "a perception among miners" that the industry was inherently dangerous and argues that adherence to standard safety procedures would have averted the accident. Mr Bobby Godsell, chairman and chief executive of Anglo American's gold and uranium division, said Anglo would study the report.

"Management fully accepts its responsibility for designing and maintaining safe mines, but all employees can and must play their role in ensuring safe work practices each and every shift," he said. "We are not aware of any major difference between ourselves and organised labour on the subject of health and safety. The inquiry found that officials at the mine conspired to withhold information about an electrical fault on the locomotive from senior management, the police and officials of the Department of Energy Affairs. Mr Justice Leon said an electritha condition of the locomotive and was therefore guilty of colpa ble homicide.

He also recommended that the mine manager be charged with negligence. "It is not sufficient (for a manager) simply to delegate authority for safety at a mine," he said.

South African gold mines are among the deepest in the world, and miners often often descend to depths of several kilometres underground.

There has been no significant improvement in the fatality rate over the last decade, despite a large fall in injury rates due to advances in underground medical care and technological in 1984, the fatality rate was 1.23 deaths per 1,000 workers, compared to 1.26 in 1995. But the overall death toll has declined as the number of gold miners working underground has fallen from 109,000 in 1984 to 53,700 in 1984. according to the government Mining Engineers Division.

The half percentage point reductions in the discount and Lombard rates - representing the effective floor and ceiling for money market rates - to 2.5 and 4.5 per cent respectively are in line with the weak economy and low inflation. They sbould also stiffen Bonn's resolve to cut spending and encourage moderate wage

Go-ahead for German train

The German parliament yesterday decided that plans to build a 450kph magnetic levitation train between Berlin and Hamburg should press ahead despite warnings that there would be a massive cost overshoot on the controversial DM8.9bn ($6bn) project.

Earlier this year the federal audit court had warned there would be unspecified overruns on the project and urged the government to undertake further studies. However, the budget committee of the Bundestag, the lower house of parliament, which had withheld its approval of the project last month, said the project should be continued after the finance ministry had presented a report dismissing risks of cost overruns.

Social Democrat politicians, who either control or have a say in two of the states which the proposed Transrapid will cross, have so far opposed the project because of its costs. They also argue that a normal high speed railway line would be just as

Greece is to lodge a protest with Turkey over alleged violations of its airspace in the Aegean sea, scene of recent disputes between the two Nato allies, the foreign ministry said

Greek newspapers reported that the violations occurred on Wednesday near the disputed eastern Aegean islets of Imia, known in Turkey as Kardak, after two Greek American tourists visited the deserted rocky outcrops to lay a wreath. Government officials played down the incident and denied reports that the Greek coastguard had rushed to remove a Greek and an American flag hoisted on the islet by the

Schengen group expands

The number of European countries permitting passport-free travel between them is set to increase after five Scandinavian countries were admitted yesterday as observer members of the Schengen group. Meeting in The Hague, the existing Schengen countries gave three European Union members – Denmark, Finland and Sweden - observer status, along with non-EU Norway and Iceland.

The five Nordic countries already operata a passport union among themselves. They will now he permitted to attend all meetings of the 10 signatory countries of the Schengen Convention. Only seven of the 10 original signatories have fully implemented passport-free travel, but the three Scandinavian countries in the EU are expected to join them soon as full members.

There were also signs of a solution to a row between France and the Netherlands over the liberal Dutch attitude to drugs, which has hindered implementation of the convention. Mr Michel Barnier, France's European Affairs minister, said France was discussing setting up "flying squads" of customs guards along borders with Luxembourg and Belgium, to stem the flow of drugs finding their way into France from the Neil Buckley, Brussels and Agencies

Strike hits Air France

Air France Europe, part of the Air France group, said it cancelled half its flights yesterday and would do the same today because of a 48-bour strike. The airline said tha cancellation of about 275 international and domestic flights was forced by a stoppage called by all six pilots' and

Tha USPNT union called the strike in protest at what it called a "policy of subcontracting", pointing to a rise to 35 per cent from 10 per cent in the number of leased aircraft and crews used for Air France Europe flights over the past 10 years, Tha union has said that, since 1990, crew numbers have fallen 20 per cent.

Mr Christian Blanc, Air France chairman, has said he was willing to negotiate with the pilots. He wants to bring the two airlines together and cut costs as part of his plan to bring the whole group back to breakeven next year. Reuter, Paris Luftbansa, the German airline, said 50 per cent of its scheduled passeni ger flights from Düsseldorf airport were running again as of yesterday. Services were hit by a fire at the airport last week which killed 16 people, and flights were diverted to Cologne/Bonn airport.

Threat to state coalition

The future of the governing coalition of the east German state of Mecklenburg-Vorpommern is in jeopardy after the Social Democratic party, the junior coalition partner, called for the resignation of finance minister Mrs Bärbel Kleedehn, a Christian Democrat, following claims they were not consulted over a state rescue package for shipyards.

Mr Harald Ringstorff, the SDP leader, said the resignation of Mrs Kleedehn was "the condition for the continuation of the coalition". If Mrs Kleedehn did not resign the SPD said it would convene an extraordinary party meeting early next week to consider withdrawing from the CDU-led government. The CDU rejected the resignation demand.

The dispute centres oo a DM1bn ($600m) financing package agreed earlier this month by Mrs Kleedehn and the federal government for shippards belonging to Bremer Vulkan, the west German shipbuilding group, which in February sought protection from its creditors. Gdansk wins orders respite

Poland's Gdansk shipyard, which faces the prospect of bankruptcy and the loss of 7,000 lobs, has won financial relief from shipowners with orders at the yard who have agreed not to collect penalty payments worth $19m on delayed vessels. The owners have also agreed to have the Gdansk yard, whose debt reached 417.5m zlotys ($161m) at the end of last year, make savings on equipping the vessels without lowering year, make savings on equipping the vessels without lowering their price. This concession is worth up to $1m on each of the 21 ships to be built at the yard. The original contracts, given delivery delays, rising costs and a relatively strong zloty, have merely been generating losses.

The privatisation ministry, citing "low interest by potential investors", extended until the end of this month a tender deadline for bidders for a strategic stake in the yard which was due to expire yesterday. The management at Gdansk, which is still majority state-owned, says the shipowners' concessions have cleared the way for the government to grant the subsidies the yard needs to finance a restructuring Christopher Bobinski, Warsan

Poland's government has pledged to bring inflation down to between an annual 6 per cent and 7 per cent by the end of the century from this year's 17 per cent in a plan which should enable the country to meet the European Union's entry requirements, Mr Grzegorz Kolodko, the finance minister, has

The plan also assumes lower personal income tax rates beginning next year as well as a cut in the budget deficit from last year's 2.8 per cent of GDP to 1.7 per cent of GDP in the year 2000. Mr Kolodko added that he wanted to bring the present 40 per cent rate of corporate tax down to 32 per cent within five years. The government also wanted capital gains earned on the Warsaw stock exchange to stay tax-free for the next five years, he said.

The projections assume that Poland's economy will grow by over 5 per cent annually in this period while the rate of unemployment would fall from 14.9 per ceut last year to between 9.4 and 10.2 per cent in 2000.

Mr Kolodko sees continued export growth as well as rising investment spending and housing development spurring Poland's economic expansion while greater productivity and improved tax collection rates will provide the extra revenues to enable the government to cut taxes while lowering budget Christopher Bobinski

Belgium draws up national deal on jobs

By Neil Buckley

Belgium's government, employers and trade unions sterday unveiled a "contract for the future" aimed at halving unemployment by the early years of the next century. Mr Jean-Luc Debaene, the

Flemish Christian Democrat prime minister, brokered the deal with the two sides of industry. Belgium's jobless rate - 14 per cent by its own measure - is one of the highest in the European Union. The deal was reached early vesterday after 16 hours of talks, the culmination of two months of meetings, and must now be agreed by the boards of unions and employer organisa-

Main points include agreement to keep wage growth in line with that in neighbouring countries in return for job creation measures, a phased reduction in the crippling social costs borne by Belgian employers, and moves to "redistribute" work and eocourage part-time working.
The agreement re-emphato be in the vanguard of countries moving to a single European currency. It says monetary union is essential to the "durable convergence" of European ecoco-mies, which will itself reduce unemployment.

The Belgian "contract" was inspired both by the call by Mr Jacques Santer, European Commission president, for a Europe-wide employment pact, and by neighbouring Germany's efforts to create a tri-partite "alliance for jobs".

Mr Dehaeoe seemed uncoocerned by the limited success of the experiment in Germany, arguing that Belgium had specific problems. If these were tackled, that could "release the on employment

press Yeltsin on Chechnya

By Chrystia Freeland in Moscow

On the eve of a prestigious international summit, the war in Chechnya yesterday delivered two fresh political embar-rassmeots for Russian President Boris Yeltsin.

The first was a call by Médécins Sans Frontieres, the respected international medical aid group, to the Group of Seven leaders who will meet in Moscow today and tomorrow to press their Russian hosts to end flagrant human rights ahuses in Chechnya.

Mr Yeltsin is hoping to use the two-day meeting on Luclear issues as a platform for raising his domestic profile ahead of June 16 presidential elections, but the aid organisation'e appeal could hinder his

In a statement issued yesterday, Médécins Sans Frontières urged the western leaders con-vening in Moscow "to put pressure on the Russian govern-ment to stop gross and systematic targeting of civilians and violations of bumanitarian law in Chechnya"

The group's report included documented allegations of organised human rights abuses by the Russian military in the hreakaway region. Theee included indiscriminate shooting at civillans, including women, the elderly and children; requiring civilians to pay a fee to flee villages which have been targeted for Russian hombardment (the price is reported to be about $10,000-$12,000 for two to three hours' passage); and extensive looting of civilian homes by Russian

Turkish parties compromise on bank governor

NATO CHIEF REJECTS

RUSSIAN VETO RIGHT

By John Barham in Ankara

Turkey finally appointed a new central bank governor yesterday, ending weeks of wrangling between the new conservative coalition government's two partners.

But the choice of Mr Cazi Errel, a banker and former top civil servant, as a compron figure has not ended the feud-ing between the two parties over economic policy or senior jobs. Mr Mesut Yilmaz, prime minister and leader of the Motherland party, and his coalition partner Mrs Tansu Ciller, head of the True Path party, both profess the same pro-western, free market values. But deep mutual mistrust has paralysed policy-making since the government took office in March and they cannot decide who

A noisy row has broken out between two ministers, each of whom claims to be Turkey's new economy overlord. Mr Ufuk Söylemez, a protégé of Mrs Ciller, claims the joh despite conflicting demands by Mr Rüşdü Saraçoğlu, a Motherland minister of state and an infornationally respected for-

Camdessus in plea on debt relief

By Robert Chote, Economics Editor, in Washington

Mr Michel Camdessus, the managing director of the International Monetary Fund, insisted yesterday individual creditor governments should do all they could to relieve the debt burdens of the poorest countries before calling on the IMF and World Bank to step in.

Mr Camdessus was defending a controversial joint IMF/ World Bank initiative to tackle poor country debt which will be discussed by finance ministers and central bank goveroors at the institutions' spring meetings early next week

The plan proposes that the Paris Club of creditor governments reduce the stock of debt and service payments owed to them by eligible countries by up to 90 per cent, compared with the 67 per cent currently available in theory under the so-called Naples terms. The international financial institutions would then relieve the burden of debts owed to them sufficient to reduce total debt stocks and service payments to sustainable levels. But several leading industrial countries believe that this plan puts too great a burden

World Bank should play a more central role earlier in the Britain and the Netherlands, for example, bave both indi-cated they might offer relief of up to 80 per cent in the Paris Club but have not agreed to

on them and that the IMF and move to 90 per cent. However, Mr Camdessus argued it was important for the international institutions to protect their "preferred creditor status", whereby they enjoy high credit ratings and financial credibility because debts owed to them have to be repaid before debts owed to anybody else. "I hope the Paris Club will recognise the seriousness of this problem of principle we have here," Mr Camdessus said. Otherwise the institutions might have to change their way of doing business.

Mr Camdessus added that if preferred creditor status was interpreted strictly, the Fund could not belp until all other official creditors had written off all their claims. "But we are not that extremist," he said. The relationship between the Paris Club and the multilateral institutions is one of a number of outstanding issues relating to the debt initiative detailed in a confidential memo from the Fund and Bank to the 24 ministers on the so-called "development committee". which is due to meet next Tuesday.

aspects that need to be fleshed out," the memo says. These include the nature of the commitments to ease the hurden of debt, bow these commitments might be implemented, and how the roles of the various creditors and donors should be co-ordinated.

The memo also outlines a oumber of a disagreements which emerged when the proexecutive boards of the Fund and Bank.

"Some directore have suggested, in particular, that the proposed period of policy track record required of potential beneficiaries is too long, and the achievement of debt sustainability too distant. Others bave argued that the suggested phasing of relief is appropriate to ensure the fulfilment of a country's policy commitments, without which there can be no lasting solution to Its debt problems".

The memo notes that it was widely accepted that bilateral creditors will have to provide significantly enhanced relief beyond current mechanisms". but said that some directors had "questioned the extent of reduction expected from the Paris Club and other bilateral and commercial creditors".

The development committee is not expected to resolve many of these issues; the memo asks only that it approve the framework as a basis for further work and that it commission action ahead of its meeting in the autumn. Another thorny issue is how the Fund should finance its own contribution to the initiative, a central element of which would be to put its concessional "enhanced structural adjustment facility" (ESAF) on a permanent footing.

Mr Camdessus said that he favoured selling a small part of the Fund's $40bn gold reserves. investing the proceeds and using the income. The Germans oppose gold sales on was inclined to the solution put forward by France. France is advocating stronger guarantees for a 1993-style understanding. But the US and Israel have so far been pushing a formula under which Hizhollah would be disarmed. Mr Efnech said the arms of Hizbollah were a question between Hiz-bollah and the Lebanese government, "No one else has any say in the matter." Tourism reels after terror attack

By Robin Allen and Shehira Idriss in Cairo

Gunmen, thought to he Moslem militants, yesterday dealt a potentially devastating blow to Eygpt's tourist industry, shooting dead 17 Greek tourists and an Egyptian yesterday outside a botel in Cairo's Giza district near the pyramids, one of Egypt's prime tourist attractions. Another 15, mostly Greek, were wounded.

The gunmeo are thought to be members of the Gama'a al-Islamiya, a group of militants who have killed 25 people and wounded 73 others, mostly tourists, in the last four years. Most previous attacks have taken place on trains taking

G7 nuclear summit holds out election promise for Yeltsin

Moscow talks are about two kinds of safety, writes our Foreign Staff

Tsarist Russia who created deceptively pros-perous "Potemkin Villages" to give the travelling monarch the impression that all was well in the Russian countryside, Moscow's street cleaners, sign painters and traffic police have been working overtime to prepare for an international summit meeting this weekend.

The Russian capital's careful make-over is outward evidence of the dual agenda driving the Group of Seven leading industrialised nations' summit today and tomorrow.

Officially, the G7 leaders are gathering in Moscow to improve nuclear power safety standards and to counter the threat of ouclear smuggling, especially from the impover-ished former Soviet Union. To be beld just a week before the 10th anniversary of the nuclear accident at Chernobyl, the world's most devastating nuclear disaster, the summit is also expected to press for the closure of the Charnobyl nuclear reactors at a session which will be joined by Mr Leonid Kuchma, tha Ukrainian

But the Kremlin is hoping that the highly technical dis-cussions of long-term, nuclear safety issues will serve a second, more immediate purpose. Less than two months before elections on June 16 for Russia's president, Mr Boris Yeltsin is planning to use the high-powered international gathering as a glittering plat-form for his re-election cam-

As his battle with Mr Gennady Zyuganov, the Commu-nist party leader and front-runner in the presidential contest, has intensified, Mr Yeltsin has tried to convince Russian voters that putting a Communist in the Kremlin would force the country back into the impoverished isolation of the cold war era. Mr Yeltsin is expected to drive that message home over the weekend as he hob-nobs

A western diplomat in Moscow said his government "accepted and understood" Mr Yeltsin's political motives, and officials in the G7 states. including Germany and the US, said one of the summit's goals was to show support for the Russian president and the reform process he has spear-

In the opinion of western leaders, who have showered Mr Yaltsin with political and financial support before the June ballot, averting a communist victory at the polls goes hand-in-hand with the sum-

ike the courtiers in Tsarist Russia who cre-

Although the G7 aid pledges now total some $3bn, Kiev is pressing for another $1bn safely to shut down the stricken power plant and develop new sources of energy. Ukraine has also said it cannot begin restructuring its economy, which depends on nuclear power for 40 per cent of its energy needs, until it actually receives some of the promised western assistance.

Mr Knchma's presence at the summit is also expected to provide G7 leaders with an oppor-tunity delicately to offer support for Ukraine in its

Mr Yeltsin has tried to convince Russian voters that putting a Communist in the Kremlin would force the country back into the impoverished isolation of the cold war era

mit's official objective: increasing international nuclear

One of the most pressing issues, particularly for the European members of the G7. is expected to be the planned closure of the two reactors still functioning at the Chemobyl nnclear power plant in Ukraine. Although Mr Kuchma, the Ukrainian leader, pledged last December to close down the reactors by the year 2000 in exchange for $2.3bn in grants and loans, western offi-cials said they wanted a "reaffirmation" of that promise.

The issue is particularly important for France, whose leader, Mr Jacques Chirac, will co-chair the meeting with Mr Yeltsin France's keen interest lies in its anxiety to svoid any repeat of the Chernobyl accident that would jeopardise its own acute dependence on atomic power, which supplies sometimes stormy relationship with Russia. Western governments have come to see Ukraine as a bulwark against the potential re-emergence of a neo-imperialist Moscow.

G7 governments are also expected to push Russia to agree to tougher rules on the dumping of nuclear waste at sea, a regular Russian practice until 1993. Mr Viktor Mikhailov, Russia's minister for atomic energy, said yesterday that Russia would back an international ban.

Another western concern-but one which risks offending Russian sensibilities - is finding ways to prevent nuclear smuggling. Recent reports have suggested that, because of the economic and political collapse in the wake of the dissolution of the Soviet Union, one of the world's most dire security threats is that nuclear material smuggled from the

by terrorist groups.
Facilities for producing weapons-grade uranium and plutonium are large and expensive, making them difficult for rogue states to hide. For that reason, buying smuggled plutonium would be a highly-desir-able short cut for any country attempting to produce nuclear weapons secretly.

According to the Russian nuclear regulatory agency, un nium and plutonium suitable for nuclear weapons is stored at 900 sites around the former Soviet Union. These stores hold around 100 tonnes of plutonium and 1,200 tonnes of enriched uranium, enough for tens of thousands of nuclear

Western officials said that the conference participants will discuss a joint programme to prevent nuclear smuggling and there will be a first exchange of information about how to secure material where it is located. Germany will propose that plutonium derived from nuclear disarmament pro-grammes should be protected under the safety rules of the IAEA and expects such a resolution to be a significant part of the summit.

But Russian officials, keen to be viewed as a great power, have already objected to western suggestions that nuclear security is slack in their country and the issue is expected to require delicate handling.

Although western diplomats say that, beyond the rhetoric, the summit's aims are modest, the meeting is likely to satisfy the Russian hosts.

They want to join the club of great states and they want to be acknowledged as a normal, western country," said Markov. "This step towards the creation of a G8 is an important symbolic goal."

Efforts by the four Quad powers to forge a common front in the WTO oegotiations now close to the deadline for completion at the end of this month - are expected to dominate a meeting of their trade ministers which begins tonight in Kobe, Japan.

Japan presented an improved WTO offer, foreshadowed in the government'a deregulation package last month. The offer would scrap limits oo foreign ownership of telecommunications companies, except for NTT and KDD, the main domestic and international operators. But though officials said the US welcomed the new offer, it and the EU said they were still seeking more concessions from Japan. Washington and Brussels are also pressing each other to move further - amid signs that both may be preparing to do so.

Sir Leon Brittan, the EU's trade commissioner, is said to be cautiously confident of persuading Belgium, France and Spain to drop ownership restrictions which have been criticised by the US, though it is uncertain how quickly they will do so. Sir Leon also returned from a recent visit to Washington encouraged by US readiness to consider further liberalisation of satellite and submarine cable services and of conditions on foreign ownerahip of communications

The US and the EU hope this weekend's meeting will achieve enough common ground to enable the Quad powers to join forces in press-ing the roughly 30 other countries in the WTO negotiations to table more liberal offers.

The US and EU are also keen to make progress in Kobe towards a planned WTO agreement on free trade in information technology products. However, on other issues, the priorities of the participants in the talks differ.

Sir Leon is expected to press Washington to negotiate more constructively in the WTO on liheralising maritime services and to reiterate criticism of recent US legislation which would penalise foreign compa-nies doing husiness in Cuba.

He will also call for a relatively ambitious agenda at the WTO's ministerial conference in Singapore in December and argue that it should commit itself to preparing for the launch of a new round of comprehensive trade negotiations before the end of the century. However, his proposals are likely to receive a lukewarm response from the US, which will be represacted by Ms Charlene Barshefsky in her first international engagement since she was named acting trade representative this month. She is expected to argue that the conference should be mainly a stocktaking exercise, and that new WTO initiatives should be confined to action on labour standards and corporate bribery.

Japan plans to press the US to give more support for China's early admission to the WTO. Ms Barshefsky, who has handled most recent US trade negotiations with Beijing, is expected to reiterate it is op to China to meet WTO obliga-

VW is building an engine plant at São Carlos in São Paolo of Paraná, Renault has shown originality while still following the herd, which has preferred to gather in São Paolo state to the north.

Renault is the latest in a string of motor groups planning to invest in Brazil or to expand existing operations. Before the end of the month, Mercedes-Benz is expected to reveal the location of its new Brazil's car markst bas mushroomed in recent years on the back of economic growth and political stability. Production rose 27 per cent to 1.4m units last year, ranking Brazil seventh among the world's carmakers. Output should continue rising to the end of the century.

Mrs Dorothea Werneck, Brazil's ebullient trade minister, says production could approach 3m units hy 2000. Few analysts share her optimism, but many believe the 2m unit barrier can be breached. The boom has prompted car-makers to re-examine a country they coce dismissed as a lost cause. Existing manufacturers, such as Volkswageo, Fiat and General Motors - Brazil's "Big Three" which account for more than 80 per state and a truck and bus facility in Rio de Janeiro state. Ford, VW's partner in the nowdissolved Autolatina joint venture, is spending about $1bn to make the Flesta in Brazil, while GM is weighing up the idea of a new facility.

Other plants are being evaluated as the world's carmakers look for growth opportunities to compensate for the slowdown in their traditional and now mature - home markets. Renault, which has been relatively slow to expand beyond its European base, says South America will be an essential part of its long-term goal to generate 25 per cent of sales outside Europe, compared with 15 per cent at present.

The company expects its 2,000 future Brazilian workers to produce 120,000 mid-sized Méganes a year once the new factory is running in 1999. That should help Renault, which sold more than 10,000 cars in Brazil last year, raise its market share to 8 per cent hy 2005 from 0.6 per cent today.

Traditionally, however, car-makers have flocked to São Paolo because of its big and relatively affluent population and a strong industrial infrastructure. The state also boasts The Latin beat: European car makers' drive into Argentina and Brazil end annual output an established motor components industry and ample trained labour. But São Paolo'a dominance may be turning into a handi-cap. Mr Louis Schweitzer, Renault's chairman, says it was ona of four regions shortlisted for the plant. Renault was put off, however, by a lack of suitable sites for a big facility and by São Paolo's crime record, with one murder an hour, as attract a prestige project which would create jobs, and stimulate local industry, Parana's offer was the winner, partly because of the state government's willingness to head a consortium of local companies which would inject up to $300m in the project.

However, Mr Jaime Lerner, Paraná's governor, claims it would have been successful even without that bait Curitiba lies between the main markets of Argentina (with which it shares a border and where Renault has a car plant) and Brazil's big population centres of São Paolo, Rio and Belo Horizonte. With the Mercosur customs union between Brazil, Argentina, Paraguay and Uruguay now tak-ing effect, Paraná's former isolation is turning into a blessing rather than a curse. Curitiba also offered a good urhan infrastructure and a well educated workforce. The port of Paranagua, 60km to the south, is being expanded to take bigger ships; new roads and railways are under construction; and the city's airport should accommodate wide-bodied jets within two years.

The state's governor played a central role in winning Renault round. An architect and former three-times mayor of Curitiba, he has become a familiar figure on the interna-tional conference circuit after making his city a model for town planning and urhan transportation.

Mr Lerner modestly calls Curitiba "a point of reference", rather than a "model". But whatever the terminology, the quality of life in the region was a big attraction for Renault. Having an undarstanding local partner was as important. Renault has learned to value local support the hard way. Its Argentine plant suffered heavy losses in the 1980s as French bosses struggled with shifting local politics and recalcitrant unions. Only after selling out to a local entrepreneur did the factory start making money.

Paraná has used state money to attract prestige projects before. In the mid-1970s, it tempted Volvo to build a truck factory in Curitiha, with the state contributing to the $12m (out of total equity of $45m) put up by local shareholders.

Mr Karl-Erling Trogen, head of Volvo's truck division.

describes Curitiba'a appeal in much the same terms as Mr Schweitzer. In spite of a diffi-cult period in the 1980s, he says Volvo has never looked back. Volvo's plant now employs 1,500 and has become the group's regional centre for

But Mr Lerner is reluctant to say whether he will promise the same financial support to Mercedes-Benz and the other carmakers now eyeing up Brazil. Having netted a prestige investor like Renault, he hopes Paraná's industrial profile will start to speak for itself.

EU set to protest at US law on for private Cuba trade power bids

By Frances Williams in Geneva and Bruce Clark in Brussels

The Europeao Unico is preparing to make a strong protest to Washington, and to warn of possible retaliation, over a newly adopted US law which could penalise companies dealing with Cuba.

A statement which the EU's 15 foreign ministers are expected to approve at their talks in Luxembourg oo Monday will express the Union's "regret and disappointment"

The protest will sound a jarring note at a meeting which already has a packed accoda including coosultations with Mr Warreo Christopher, the US secretary of state, and several Middle Eastern countries on how to combat terrorism.

The statement on Cuba will say that the EU is examining its options, such as raising the matter at the World Trade Organisation and taking counter measures. The statement is also expected to warn of negative consequences should Coo-gress push through legislation pecalising non-US companies that trade with Iran or Lihya. The US law on trading with Cuba, promoted by the conservative Republican Secator Jesse Helms, has drawn protests from Japan, Canada and Mexico as well as the EU.

The provision eotitles Cuban-Americans to sue foreign companies operating in Cuba which may be benefiting from confiscated property.

But critics have been reluctant to mount a formal chalienge through the WTO's settlement procedure. This is partly because President Bill Clinton has yet to indicate whether he will seek a waiver so as to suspend the provision. More important, experts believe a WTO challenge could fail. A provision in the original bill, which barred import of goods containing Cuban sugar and other products and was in clear violation of WTO rules, was struck out. The remaining provision - the right to sue foreign companies and deny entry to the US for executives of companies "trafficking" in expropriated property - does not obviously fall under the

Vietnam has shortlisted three foreign consortia to advise on the bidding process for its first privately financed power project, a $220m scheme which is likely to test Hanoi's appetite for foreign tovestment in the power sector.

The consortia are each by K&N Engineering of the US, Lahmeyer of Germany and by Freshfields, the London-based law firm, whose team includes Barclays Bank.

The project, known as Phu My 2, Phase 2, is to be undertaken on a build-operate-transfer (BOT) basis and is part of a larger project capable of gen-erating 900MW in the south of the country. The World Bank says elec-tricity demand in Vietnam will rise by about 14 per cent a year from 2,300MW now until the year 2000, and by 12 per cent thereafter.

It says the total investment needed in the power sector is about $6.5bn np to 2001, and that Hanol will need to find foreign tovestment on top of official development assis-

Tony Walker previews talks aimed at stopping bad becoming worse

hen Mr Warren Christopher, the US secretary of state, and Mr Qian Qichen, China's foreign minister, meet in The Hague today their main task, it seems, will be to halt a continning downward spiral in Sino-US relations.

In Beijing, a western official said that "basically the meeting should be about trying to restore a high-level dialogue and agree to further sessions down the road". The official expressed concern about rough patches ahead over issues such

Mr Kenneth Lieberthal, professor of China studies at Michigan University and specialist on the Sino-US relationship, described the encounter as "crucial" and said the two sides should work towards "stopping further erosion".
"Basically," he said, "they should try to establish a floor under things."

This will not prove easy at a moment of severe mutual unhappiness over a range of issues, including arms proliferation, intellectual property rights, market access, human rights and Taiwan. Qian-Christopher encounter is taking place in the shadow of looming decisions by the US on sanctions over alleged Chinese transfers of technology to assist Pakistan's nuclear programme, and also on punitive measures over Beijing's perceived failure to honour a 12-month-old agreement to combat widespread intellectual property rights

Washington has deferred action on these issues pending today's meeting; but unless Mr Christopher receives satisfactory explanations on reasons for the alleged shipments of ring magnets to Pakistan, then limited sanctions may be applied, possibly targeting specifically Chinese companies involved in the exports. An alternative is to bar financing by the US Export-Import Bank of $800m worth of nuclear power deals in China.

US officials are also making it clear American patience is wearing thin on China's failure to stop rampant piracy of compact discs, video tapes and computer software. According to Mr Mickey Kantor, recently nominated as the US commerce secretary, some 34 CD factories with production capacity of 90m discs a year are involved in exports of pirate products.

Ms Charlene Barshefsky, the acting US trade representative, warned Beijing during talks earlier this month that the US would impose punitive tariffs on up to $2bn in Chinese imports unless action was taken against pirate producers and exporters. The US is also demanding. China live up to commitments on opening its markets to information and entertainment products.

Adding to pressures on the administration to bring Beijing into line is the imminent decision on renewal of China's Most Favoured Nation tradit status in the US. The White House faces a hard fight persuading Congress to agree to extend China's privileged lowtariff acress to the US market for another year. A decision on MFN must be taken by June 4. Comments this week strongly opposing renewal by Mr Patrick Buchanan, candi-date for the Republican presidential nomination, indicate the sort of pressures on congressmen in an election year. "Do Republicans love trade more than they loathe tyranny?" he asked. In Beijing, a US official familiar with talks on intellectual property rights abuses said the message to China in connection with the fight over MFN was that "it would be very helpful if something were done [to curb piracy] sooner rather than late China itself is taking the high road in comments before the Qian-Christopher meeting. Mr Shen Guolang, the foreign ministry spokesman, urged Washington this week not to create "new troubles and diffi-Mr Shen also denied emphatically China was involved in selling nuclear-related technology to Pakistan. "China has never sold any technology or equipment that can service the purpose of manufacturing nuclear weapons," he said. In their fourth meeting in less than 12 months - Mr Qian and Mr Christopher last met in November in Osaka in connection with the Asia-Pacific Ecoattention to Taiwan. Another item on the agenda is likely to be developments on the Korean peninsula.

Since their last encounter the Taiwan issue contributed to a further chill in Sino-US relations. The two sides exchanged sharp words over China's use of military exer-cises to intimidate voters in Talwan's presidential elections on March 23. The US deployment of two aircraft carrier task forces - the biggest concentration in the region of US naval power since the Vietnam war - underlined the seriousness of the issue.

Mr Qian and Mr Christopher are likely to explore ways to avoid further dispute, and possibly dangerous misunderstandings, over Taiwan. Both recognise the issue poses perhaps the most serious threat to Sino-US relations and that to an extent it is not completely within their control.

"In the last 18 months, we've seen the ability of Taipei to have an impact on US foreign policy," said Mr Lieberthal, referring to a visit last June to the US of President Lee Tenghui of Taiwan which infuriated

"In some ways," Mr Lieber-thal added. "Lee Teng-hui is the tail wagging the dog."
One issue on which China and the US are likely to find common ground is North Korea. The US proposal, ontlined by President Bill Clinton this week on a visit to South Korea, for four-way peace talks involving the two Koreas, the US and China won immediate support from Beijing.

Co-operation between Beljing and Washington on Korea the two have been working relatively closely to contain a potentially explosive situation on the Korean peninsula ble of collaborating when they believe it is in their mntual interests to do so.

Mr Christopher and Mr Qian have their work cut out for them, however, to restore good overall working relations given the buffeting the relationship will encounter in the next few nomic Co-operation forum - months. The best they can the two men will almost certainly devote considerable is to stop further deterioration. ASIA-PACIFIC NEWS DIGEST

N Korea mulls US talks offer

North Korea is considering a US-South Korean proposal to convene a four-party conference, including China, to discuss a peace treaty formally ending the 1950-53 Korean war, it said yesterday. We are now examining the proposal of the US side to see whether it aims at another purpose and whether it is feasible. We cannot comment any more just yet," the foreign ministry in Pyongyang said in its first official reaction to the ministry in 1900.

The statement provoked cautious optimism among South
The statement provoked cautious optimism among South

Korean officials that North Korea might accept the proposal, since it did not immediately dismiss the plan. Initial comments by several North Korean diplomats abroad had been negative. Pyongyang's ambassador to Thailand suggested South Korea might be given "observer" status in direct North Korea-US talks which North Korea prefers.

Analysis warned that willingness by the North Korean foreign ministry to accept four-party talks might be opposed by military hardliners, who appear to have increased their influence recently.

Indonesia GDP grows 8%

Indonesia's 1995 gross domestic product grew 8.07 per cent year-on-year, against the government's original 7.9 per cent forecast. The higher figure was expected because Indonesian authorities routinely understate economic forecasts. Per capita GDP rose 11 per cent on 1994.

Mr Ginandjar Kartasasmita, minister for planning and development, said GDP per capita for 1995 rose to $1,023 from $920 a year earlier. Two years of record investment levels are among factors believed to be driving the GDP figure higher. Mr Ginandjar said total 1995 GDP in constant prices, (base year 1993) was Rp445,400bn ($191bn); total non-oil and gas GDP was Rp410,000bn.

NZ balance of payments rallies

New Zealand recorded a better-than-expected balance of payments deficit of NZ$3.795bn (US$2.59bn) or 4.3 per cent of GDP in the year to December 31, Statistics New Zealand reported yesterday. The current account has deteriorated during the year, causing concern for the currency and interest rates. The December figure compared with a deficit of NZ$3.9bn, or 4.5 per cent of GDP, in the year to September. In December 1994, the deficit was NZ$2.5bn, or 3 per cent of GDP,

The latest December figures were helped by a NZ$436m improvement in the invisibles balance, mainly due to improved tourism. Mr Bevan Graham, chief economist with Westpac, said the figures probably marked a temporary improvement. The merchandise trade statistics were forecast to worsen over the rest of the year, as imports lifted and Terry Hall, Wellington exports fell.

Philippines trade surplus grows

The Philippines' balance of payments surplus for the first three months of 1996 exceeded the total surplus for the whole of 1995, the central bank said yesterday. Higher portfolio investments driven by the buoyant stock market and liberalisation of capital markets boosted the balance of payments surplus to $881m in the first quarter, $236m higher than the 1995 total of $645m.

The higher-than-expected surplus was also caused by lower government interest payments on foreign liabilities. Debt servicing, as a proportion of exports, dropped from 15 per cent to 13 per cent in the past 12 months

Mr Gabriel Singson, governor of the central bank, said the country's gross international reserves had risen to $8.89bn last week from $8.85bn in March. Central bank reserves amount to about two months' worth of imports. Edward Luce, Manila

vesterday decided to cut the reserve requirement ratio for banks in an attempt to lower The move could enable

South Korea to speed financial liberalisation as demanded by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) as Seoul prepares to ioin this year. The measure will help narrow the gap between high Korean interest rates and low ones abroad, which will reduce the chances of a feared huge influx of capital as foreigners gain greater access to Korean financial markets.

Korean officials have argued greater financial liberalisation could not be introduced until the interest rate gap shrank. This would prevent large capi-tal inflows from destabilising the economy by increasing inflation while causing the South Korean currency, the won, to appreciate, harming exports. anberra, a one-industry town, is learning how to live on its nerves. The new conservative coalition government has announced it is to cut federal public services, centred there, but as yet has refused to spell out the extent of its plans.

The plans were no clearer yesterday after Mr Peter Reith. Australia's new industrial relations minister, met union leaders in Melbourne to discuss e wave of lobs cuts in the public financial years - which would on Treasury growth forecasts, bring the budget into underlying balance. Some ministers have also conceded that an election commitment to cut departmental running costs by 2 per cent, at a cost of around 2,500 jobs, will not suffice.

There have already been harbingers of more drastic action. Earlier this week, the federal financa department announced the loss of 144 jobs, with offices closing in state and territory capitals, as well as in London and Washington.

This amounts to a 15 per cent staff reduction and is being interpreted as a lead for others to follow. All federal departments are understood to have been asked to have staff reduction strategies in place by April 24 more damage than good. She claims that the office handled 42,000 complaints and inquiries last year, with a staff of 95, and has even mooted resigning over the issue.

Compounding the public sector jobs fears is the fact that Telstra, the large governmentowned: telecommunications group, is also considering staff reduction. Mr Frank Blount, chief executive, yesterday denied reports that up to 30,000 positions - about a third of the total employed - could go. He said that Telstra - which

However, not all moves to prune staff expenditures have been greeted with acrimony. An early decision to disband the National Media Liaison Service - widely seen as a gov-ernment propaganda outfit has generally been welcomed.

There was scattered applause, too, for the new government's decision to pay "junior" ministera less than cabinet members. The latter will earn around A$132,000 a year, while the former receive about A$10,000 a year

The number of ministerial "staffers" will also be reduced, with the Howard government operating on 379, compared with the former Labor administration's 455.

More Republican congressmen add support to initiative to raise basic pay

Minimum wage push gathers force

The political push for an increase in the US federal minimum wage is now gathering momentum, with a significant number of Republicans joining what had started out as a classic Democratic election-year

About 20 Republican congressmen, up from 13 on Monday, have signed a letter urging that basic pay be raised in two 50 cent a year increments to $5.25 an hour, 10 cents more than the Democratic proposal. At a party caucus meeting on Wednesday between 30-40 urged the leader-ship not to block a floor vote

That debate prompted Mr Newt Gingrich, the Speaker, who is sitting on a 40 seat majority in the House, to concede that, at the very mini-mum, the House should hold hearings on the issue. He thought it was "not inevitable" that an increase would be approved, but added "I think that some time this year we're going to have to look at the issue of take-home pay."

Senator Bob Dole, the majority leader, concurred in a Wednesday night TV interview, saying we're looking at some way we can formulate an increase in the minimum wage." Earlier in the week, he had pulled the immigration bill

Others in the Republican leadership, well aware of the business lobby's views, are still staunchly opposed to any such action. Mr Dick Armey, the House majority leader, brusquely commented "this whole issue is a sham on the part of the Washington union bosses that fund the Demo-cratic Party."

But Mr Robert Reich, the secretary of labour and leader of the Chinton administration's campaign for an increase kept up the pressure by saying he did not think Mr Dole could afford to take the political risk of blocking a popular

Domingo Cavallo, Argentina's finance minister. yesterday found himself again at loggerheads with Congress, which is this time angered over a series of tax changes recently decreed by the minister. Government and opposi-

Congressmen, who have often balked at Mr Cavallo's brusque style, have reacted not only against the tax modifications themselves, but also at the minister's use of a decree to sweep changes past them without consultation.

Public opinion has also been stirred. "He could have lowered the cost of essential items such as bread or sugar, and not of luxury goods like carpets and alcohol," complained one woman. Hitch in Cuba sugar-for-oil deal

By Pascal Fletcher in Havana

Cuba is negotiating with a Russian trading company to resolve a commercial dispute that has blocked delivery of some Cuban sugar shipments in a big bilateral sugarfor-oil trade deal.

Cuban foreign trade officials said the problem involving Aifa-Eko, one of two Russian companies mandated by the Russian government to carry out the trade accord, was "strictly technical and commercial" and discussions were continuing. A Cuban negotiating team had already visited Moscow.

They gave no details but sugar market traders said they believed that Alfa-Eko's business with Cuba had been adversely affected by changes in the relationship hetween internal prices in Russia for sugar and world market prices for sugar and oil, which applied to the Cuba-Russia deal. World oil prices have recently rallied As a result of the dispute, Alfa-Eko was refusing to accept three or four Cuban sugar cargoes that were currently sitting in the Black Sea. The company has a half share of the 1995/96 Cuba-Russia sugar-foroil accord, signed in May last year. The overall deal foresaw the exchange of 3m tonnes of Russian oil for 1m tonnes of Cuban raw sugar to be refined for sale on the Russian domestic market.

Senior officials at Alfa-Eko in Moscow said there had been "substantial delays" in the Cuban sugar shipments. The Russian company was not prepared to con-tinue selling its oil and bnying Cuban sugar under the current conditions.

pany which with Alfa-Eko holds the Russian government tender to carry out the sugar-for-oil trade, said it was happy with the terms of the agreement with Cuba and would continue to buy sugar and sell oil

The Cuban officials would not specify the total amounts of oil and sugar already delivered under the accord but they said the deal was "pretty advanced".

The Cuban government has said the island is on track to produce 4.5m tonnes of sugar in the current 1995/96 harvest, a big improvement on last season's disastrously low barvest of only 3.3m tonnes.

Brazil's police on Wednesday shot dead at least 19 landless farmers, including a 3-year-old child, in the worst incident of rural violence for many years.

Police started shooting during an attempt to break up a protest by the landless workers movement (MST), which had blocked a road in the south of the Amazon state of Para. According to Mr Gustovo Filho, a member of the MST, the police "just started shooting, they didn't even stop to negotiate".

Human rights delegations were headed for the area yesterday to investigate bow and why the attack took place. The MST said 21 of its members were dead and others missing. with at least a further 40 people injured. Police sources said 19 formers had been killed. shooting. Rural violence is one of Brazil's most serious social prob-lems, and is blamed on police impunity and unequal land distribotion. Police nearly always act upon the orders of powerful local politicians and landowners, who are keen to get landless farmers moved away. A similar case of rural violence last year, when police killed at least 10 landless farmers in the state of Rondônia, has not yet led to any prosecutions.

Human rights groups say nearly 1,000 farmers and union leaders have been murdered in rural conflicts. The MST movement blamed the latest massacre on the government's slow progress in land reform.

The government says it resettled 40,000 landless families last year and plans to increase the number to 60,000 this year. But the MST says several million people need land, a target which the government's stretched budget

Mr Almir Gabriel, governor of Para state and an ally of President Fernando Henrique Cardoso, said the police had been told to clear the area "without violence", Mr Cardoso condemned the killings as "unacceptable" and sent bis justice minister Mr Nelson Johim to the area.

Increase in US jobless claims

The number of Americans filing first-time applications for state unemployment benefits edged up last week, the government said yesterday. The Labour Department said initial jobless claims rose 10,000 to 380,000 in the week ended

April 13 from 350,000 in the prior week. Despite the slight increase, economists viewed the level of claims as signalling a healthy labour market. "The trend in claims seems to be around 350,000," said Mr Joshua Feinman, economist at Bankers Trust. That is below what we were running late last year."

Economists were watching this week's claims number closely, in part because the numbers earlier this month and late last month were skewed by the effects of the General Motors strike in March. Last week's total claims were below Wall Street economists' forecasts of 363,000.

The closely watched four-week moving average of claims, considered a more accurate barometer because if smooths out weekly volatility, declined in the April 13 week to 387,250 from

Fresh doubts were cast yesterday on the government's room for tax cots ahead of the next election after figures showed it overshot its public borrowing target in the last financial year.

Separate figures dealt another blow to the government when they revealed that inflation failed to decline last month, contrary to most City of Londoo expectations.

The Office for National Statistics said yesterday that the government borrowed £9.6bo ($14.6bo) last mooth to cover the shortfall between its spending and tax reveoues.

As a result, the public sector borrowing requirement for 1995-96 was £32.2bo. This was £3.2bo above the chancellor's of the exchequer's forecast of £29bn set out in last November's Budget but still £3.7bo below last year's PSBR.

Poor tax reveoues were blamed for the oversboot, as well as higher than expected spending. About £2.75bn less tax was collected than planned in the Budget, including £1.25bn less corporation tax. There were also shortfalls of £750m in both VAT and income

These figures fuelled recent controversy about metbods used by companies and individuals to avoid paying tax.

Housing 'heading towards boom-bust'

By Andrew Taylor, Construction Corresp

Britain is facing a housing shortage which could lead to a return of the boom-bust cycle which has destabilised the market for much of the latter part of this century, according to a study published today. The report by tha Joseph

Rowntree Foundation, the independent social policy research organisation, says that investment in new house building in Britain had - with the exceptinn of a few short-lived surges - been falling for more than 35 years. House prices were likely to rise steeply again as demand for homes recovered, causing increased housing misery for those unable to afford higher prices or to find sufficient subsidised low-cost rented eccommodation.

Council and other publicly subsidised homebuilding had been curtailed drastically, said the report, but private-sector building had also declined. The number of new homes built annually had fallen from more than 350,000 in the 1960s to 180,000 in the mid-1980s and about 150,000 currently.

The report's author, Mr Michael Ball, professor of urhan economics at South Bank University, Loudon, called on government to reverse the policies of the past decade by increasing subsidies for social housing. He said subsidies should be paid to encourage building bomes for private rental while tax incentives could create a more stable private-sector mar-

British investment in new homes had fallen below levels in rival industrialised countries such as Germany, US. France, Japan and the Netherlands, said Prof Ball. The situation had worsened in the 1990s as the market became more depressed and efforts to limit public spending increased. Housing investment in 1994 represented just 3.2 per cent of national income of which new house construction represented only 1.1 per cent equivalent to levels in the mid-dle of the last century.

Saudi dissident allowed to stay

Mr Mohammed Al-Masaari, the Saudi dissident, was yesterday granted the right to remain in the UK for four years in a humiliating reversal for Mr Michael Howard, the Home Secretary. Mr Howard previously said that it would have been "irresponsible" for the government to have risked jobs and businesses reliant on trade with Saudi by allowing Mr Al-Masauri to stay. However, the Saudi embassy yesterday showed no dismay at the Home Office decision.

Mr Ghazi Algosaibi, the Saudl ambassador, said: "We have never asked the British government to violate its own laws, nor will we do that in the future." Mr Jack Straw, spokesman for the home office for the opposition Labour party, said: "This profound bumiliation for Michael Howard is the price which he must pay for playing fast and loose with the rule of law.

Court action disappoints Lloyd's

Lloyd's of London faced a fresh headache when plans to adjourn an important legal case were rejected by the High Court - in spite of delay being backed by a significant body of lossmaking

The decision was unwelcome for Lloyd's because it had hoped the adjournment would signal a rapprochement with embittered Names – individuals whose assets have traditionally supported the insurance market.

The case tests Lloyd's ubility to change the insurance market's rules so damages won in court by lossmaking Names are used to settle their outstanding debts at the market.

Separately, lossmaking Names claimed another legal victory when e further 800 Names won the latest stage of their court battle for damages for more than £70m ($106.4m) in losses. The Bromley 475 Names action group said the High Court ruling showed they were victims of negligent underwriting. It would strengthen the group's hand in negotiations with Lloyd'e over the proposed out-of-court award, currently worth $2.8bn.($4.25bn)

ICI progresses with power plant

Imperial Chemical Industries and Intergen, a US-controlled energy company, are pressing ahead with the construction of a controversial £250m ($380m) power plant in Cheshire by placing equipment orders for the project.

ABB, the Swiss-Swedish engineering group, yesterday said it was supplying turbines worth $250m for the 720-megawatt plant at ICI's chemicals plant at Runcorn.

ICI announced last year it was building the power plant after a bitter campaign against the electricity pool pricing system, which it said penalised industrial users. ICI is supplying the land and buying the electricity produced, but the plant will be funded, owned and operated by InterGen, a joint venuture between Pacific Gas & Electric, a North American utility, and Bechtel, the US construction group. ABB is supplying two gas-fired GT26 turbine sets, its most advanced gas turbines for the plant. Stefan Wagstyl, Industrial Editor

Rail sell-off may not meet hopes of property gain

By Simon London in London

Investors preparing to buy Railtrack shares in expectation of windfall property gains should think again. Whila the company will squeeza some value from its £1.4bn ($2.1bn) property assets, the timing and scale of any development profits are uncertain.

Railtrack is being launched into the private sector owning properties ranging from allotments and railway arches to international stations.

The profits generated by these assets are currently modest in relation to the company's overall business. In the year to March 1995, rental income was fillm, against total turnover of £2.3bn.

The question is whether Railtrack can add to this steady stream of income by selling surplus land and redeveloping its stations, car parks and freight yards.

The prospect has raised hackles among opponents of rail privatisation. Ms Clare Short transport secretary for the opposition Labour party, said: "These assets can not be allowed to be lost to the industry in the interests of short-term property gains for the banefit of shareholders. Railtrack is not a property company. It should not be

The worry is that Railtrack will try to boost this average by selling operational assets such as stations and freight yards. After all, the company has agreed a formula with the rail regulator whereby it will keep 75 per cent of any property income over and above the fibn expected.

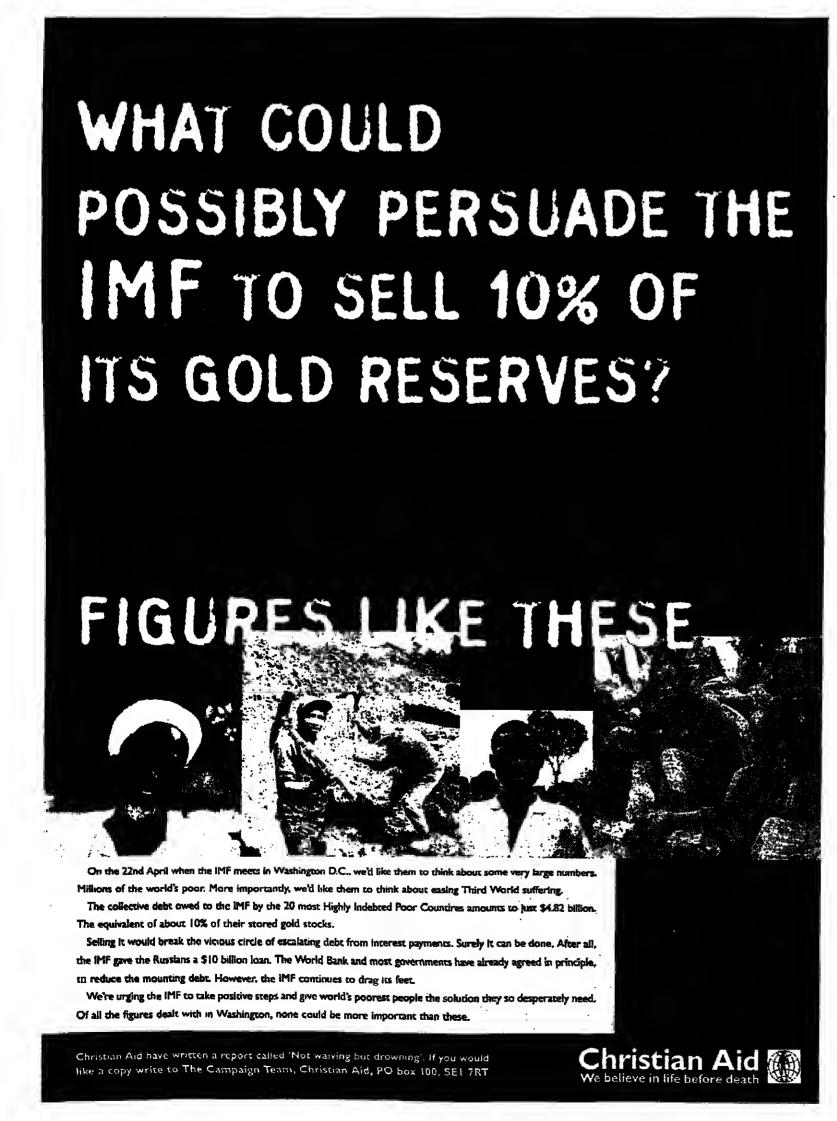

In reality, though, there is probably limited scope for either moving stations or breaking op freight yards. Under the new structure of the Forecasts submitted by Rail- railways, most stations are contituency of Staffordsbire

Water shortages forecast

Possible solutions include piping supplies from France

By Leyla Boulton, Environment Correspondent

Britain's water companies face a tough summer coping with year, according to Dr Jan Pentreath, chief scientist of the newly established Environment Agency for England and Wales, which represents most of the big water companies.

In an interview this week with the Financial Times, Dr Pentreath, said: "It's going to be tough. There isn't going to be enough. It's the end of the varinter rain and the ground is not full of water."

Dr Pentreath, a former senior official at the National Rivers Anthority which has heen subsumed into the agency, said that in future water companies would have to be far more pro-active on water conservation. Dr Pentreath's remarks come as water companies have been scrambling throughout the winter to avoid a repeat of last summer's political debacle over water supplies. One company, Folkestone and Dover Water Services, which is owned by France's Compagnie Generale des Eaux, has heen considering piping water to

NatWest council praised by union

By Robert Taylor, Employment Editor

Banking union leaders joined managers at National Westminster Bank yesterday in halling the first meeting of the financial services industry's only global staff council as a significant industrial relations breakthrough.

"We have crossed the indus trial relations barrier," said Mr Alan Ainsworth, assistant secretary of Bifu, the banking union, after the 54-strong council's inaugural meeting in Oxfordshire. Mr Derek Wanless, NatWest chief executive, said the council had demonstrated the value of such a consultative body. The majority of delegates were from the UK but representatives also came from the group's global operations, including the US, Spain, Russia, France, Japan and Ger-

"Having such a council is right for us now," Mr Wanless added. "It is a very attractive model that has filled a commudeation gap in the group." More than 30,000 employees took part in ballots to elect the council. Just over balf its recognised trade unions and just over half are from the UK. Four members are trade union officials.

Mr Rory Murphy, general secretary of the NatWest staff association in the UK, said the first meeting had been "fruitful". "Never before have the staff been given access to so much management thinking and information," he added.

In its presentation of future strategy, the group confirmed further job losses and branch closures but council members said they boped there would be full consultation.

NatWest is the first large company to establish such a body across all its global business activities. But Mr Wanless made clear the council was not created as "a defensive and minimalist response' to the introduction of the European Union's legally enforceable directive on works

THE PROPERTY MARKET

A world-class production

Simon London examines the £170m plan to redevelop the South Bank Centre

roposals for a £170m ($258.40m) redevelopment of London's South Bank Centre, the largest arts complex in Europe, have reached a critical

In the next few weeks, the Arts Council will decide whether to hack the scheme with £127m raised from the National Lottery. This would be the largest-ever grant of lottery funds.

The remainder of the cash to finance the project, which aims to transform the current ugly, unwelcoming complex, will be raised from the private

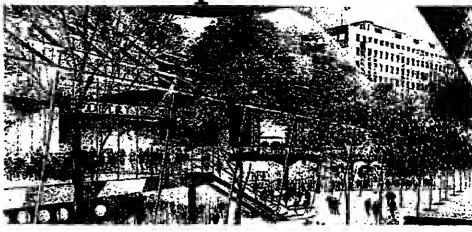

The South Bank should have little trouble raising its private-sector contribution. The 27-acre site - which accommo dates the Royal Festival Hall, the National Theatre and the Hayward Gallery - stands in a riverside location only a few yards from Waterloo Station, one of London's husiest rail terminals.

For all its architectural drawbacks, the South Bank attracts millions of visitors a year, many of them freespending tourists. This creates scope for commercial development to help support the rede-velopment of the arts

This potential is not lost on the South Bank board of governors, which includes Mr Elliott Bernerd, chairman of Chelsfield, Mr David Marlow, a director of Brixton Estate, and Mr Alan Smith, chairman designate of Storehouse and former chief executive of Kingfisher, the retail groups. But the board is trying to satisfy a number of fickle audiences. It must convince the arts lophy that its redevelopment plans will maintain the character of the South Bank as cultural centre. "Everyone is very nervous about turning this site into a shopping centre," says Mr The proposals being considered by the Arts Council include only a modest expansion of the commercial space at the South Bank. The board wants to create about 130,000 sq ft of retail space in the pedestrianised areas around the main arts buildings and in a new arcade driven through the Royal Festival Hall.

Mr Smith estimates this could provide the South Bank with rental income of £2m to £3m a year, which could be mortgaged to raise perhaps £25m. This would account for most of the private-sector capital required to stand along. side lottery funding.

Arts purists might balk at even this modest step towards commercialism. The trade-off is that the South Bank will be able to refurbish the Royal Fes-tival Hall, substantially improve the Queen Elizabeth Hall and the Hayward Gallery, and build a new 400-seat performance space.

The whole scheme would be housed beneath a steel and glass canopy designed by Sir Richard Rogers, the architect responsible for the Pompidon Centre in Paris and the Lloyd's of London beadquarters build-The danger is that the Arts Council will chip away at the overall scheme. It might question whether the £16m canopy is really necessary, for example, or whether the Queen Elizabeth Hall really needs to accommodate opera.

The South Bank hoard responds that It has put forward a coherent plan to create s world-class arts complex, not a divisible wish-list. But what if the unthinkable happens and the South Bank Centre's application for lottery funding is turned own completely? The board would then be faced with two options: either try again or take a long hard look at redevelopment led by the private sector.

This second route has been tried before. In the late 1980s, the South Bank teamed up with Stanhope, the property developer headed by Mr Stuart Lipton, to propose a redevelopment financed entirely with private-sector capital.

The scheme, designed by Mr Terry Farrell, the architect, envisaged creating 150,000 sq ft of shops and 400,000 sq ft of offices.

The design, which involved demolishing and rebuilding many of the existing South Bank arts buildings, raised hackles in the arts community. It sank with the property

The proposed redevelopment of the South Bank is only one of a string of separate projects taking place along the south bank. These promise to revitalise the southern side of the Thames, traditionally regarded by the property industry as the poor relation of the north and conference centre at County Hall, to the west of the Sonth Bank Centre, promises to further increase the number of visitors to the area. Plans unveiled this week for a giant ferris wheel at Jubilee Gardens, between the arts complex and County Hall, should have a similar impact. A local employers group which includes J. Sainsbury and Sheli, is also planning a series of cosmetic improvements to roads and walkways to make the area more appeal-

This set of projects could turn the south bank into some of London's most valuable land for leisure development. There is also scope for more highvalue residential buildings.

has at least one site which is crying out for redevelopment: the land between the main arts complex and Jabilee Gardens has been an untidy car park since the Festival of Britain ended in the 1950s.

All this suggests that the South Bank board could adopt a more commercial approach if the Arts Council turns down its application for a lottery grant. If lottery funding is forthcoming, though, the wider regeneration of the south side of the River Thames will take a

Strategy by computer

bec operations two years ago, it experimented with a technique callled Performance Focus Management.

Armed with vast amounts of data and a tailored computer program to analyse it, the group decided lts resources were misallocated. "We increased the number of personal lenders at some branches and cut down at others." says Andrew White, executive vice president of planning for the bank. The result, according to White, was a 5 to 10 per cent improvement on initial performance projections. Today, the hank considers the program an important management tool.

The Bank of Montreal is just one of a number of companies relying on the new information technology system, li has also been adopted by US West, Exxon, Barnett Bank and Florida Power.

Performance Focus Management is management by computer, it processes large amounts of data through regressioo analysis to help managers make decisions ahout

where to direct resources. Performance Focus Management focuses on the impact of forthcoming events. "We always projected a little into the future," says Allen Lastinger, president of Floridabased Barnett Bank, "For example, we would decide whether we thought interest rates were going up or down and build that into our business plan. But this is far more specific.

In ooe case, the bank took into account the negative impact the closure of a military base would have on a nearby branch. In another instance, the bank decided the relocation of an important company to another neighbourhood would substantially improve the business potential of the branch there.

Managers say detail is key in Performance Focus Management, In the Bank of Montreal's case 10 people worked to set up the program, which has been in place companywide for less than a year, and five employees continue to run it.

The program considers the impact of small events as well as bigger concerns such as interest rates. Subtle shifts in disposable income and demographics in specific neighbourhoods, the plans of competitors, and the expected effect of technological improvements in certain branches, for example, are taken

Becaose the management tool focuses on detail, the program must be tailored specifically to the company. Managers say Performance Focus Management is as much a philosophy as a technique, but most of the companies that have adopted the model rely on customised pro-grams put in place by the consultancy Booz, Allen & Hamilton

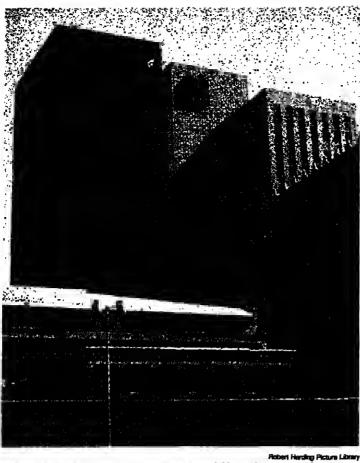

"We told Booz Allen that they needed to transfer the technology to us completely," says White. "They helped us set it up, but now we run lt with oo belp from them. We couldn't be left depending on them, ecause if you can't manage your business without a consultant. you're dead.

One of the main challenges of Performance Focus Management is the quality of information that goes into the computer program. The Bank of Montreal, for example, collects income and tax data from the federal agency Statistics Canada, information on competitors from newspaper clippings, and interest rate forecasts from economists. If the necessary information is not easily available, the bank generates it, conducting surveys in specific marketplaces to bolster its data.

To provide the necessary precision, users of Performance Focus Management are forced to dissect their husinesses. At Barnett Bank, for instance, the company is first divided into 32 geographical areas, then split into more specific business areas such as mortgage lending and consumer credit. "We have hundreds of categories," says Lastinger. "The beauty of this is that we have a prediction for how things like small-business lending in a specific part of town can be expected to perform. It gives us something against which to measure actual performance." Proponents of the new tool say it has weaned them from a number of bad management habits. One problem with traditional management, they explain, is that it placed too much emphasis on the salesmanship of second-tier executives. "In the past, it has been management by negotiation," says John Shank, a professor at Dartmouth's Amos Tuck School of Management in New

Because the process is less subjec-tive under Performance Focus Management, managers say they feel more confident about allocating resources. The program dictates everything from personnel levels to technological investment, and allows managers to react swiftly to market changes. A mortgage lender in one branch, for instance, may be switched to the consumer credit section of another branch overnight, if the computer decides that area has more growth potential.

The constant review of resources means companies using Performance Focus Management must have a flexible workforce. Proponents believe they can meet that challenge through improved hiring and training methods. "There is nothing novel about that." says consultant Joel Kurtzman, "A company without flexible employees in the 1990s is doomed to failure."

Managers say one important advantage of the computer program is that employees are evaluated on potential as well as actual performance. Traditional management models may fail to consider events beyond executives' control. Workers at a fast-food restaurant, for instance, may be praised by the chain's management for hoosting burger sales even if they had nothing to do with the improvement. How do we know if they sold more hurgers because they were working more efficiently, or if they sold more burgers because a new shopping mall is attracting more people to the area," asks Shank. Performance Focus Management, say supporters, prevents employees from being rewarded or punished erroneously by taking outside influences into account.

The technique has potential weaknesses, however, Inaccurate data, for instance, could distort vital business decisions. A com-puter may also fall to consider the human side of management. Switching employees from one branch to another may make sense from the program's viewpoint, but could wreak havoc on employees.

"The system assumes a lot," says Kurtzman. "You have to have good information going into the com-puter to get valuable information coming ont. And yon have to assume that employees can adapt to the computer's recommendations."

Good planning can save money and get a better result, say Santa Raymond and Roger Cunliffe

Solid foundations for new-building projects

he processes by which some otherwise sophisticated businesses are embarking on new-building projects can be likened to a financier investing in films for the opportunity to meet glamorous movie stars. Businesses which would prepare with extreme rigour for a new product - be it a torch or an insurance policy – will take on arranging building works in a most ill-thought out way.

Masters of effective just-in-time techniques, they appear to be taking a wasteful "just-in-case" approach when it comes to building projects: just in case they need more space, change their minds or get it wrong, they will demand both belt and

Organisations responding to new ways of working, staffing levels or location, tend to turn to the nearest building design professional – surveyor, architect, engineer or developer – and say help me out of this one".

This could be akin to "leaving Dracola baby-sitting", says John Worthington, deputy chairman of architects DEGW and professor at the University of York.

Even the straightest firm may be tempted not to advise minor refurbishment when new construction will yield twice the return – as well as something to show in the glossier trade

Yet thousands of pounds can be saved by proper preparation with the right advice. The company that spends time and energy clarifying its needs will achieve a building that really fits those needs. It will be of the right size and type, in the right place, at the right cost and will be ready on time. It will have opening windows if they are wanted information technology which serves seamlessly but without andue complexity, and a furniture inventory that is comprehensive, yet spare, economical yet bergs of snow remained on street corners. Walking around in the dead time before meeting Updike, I wondered why Bostonians were so thin. Many of them were moving at a scuttling jog along the streets and around the icebergs. It took me some time to realise that they were preparing to take part in the Boston Marathon.

As the hour epproached I lurked nervously in the lobby. I have loved John Updike from afar. And I have wondered about how he looks. On the cover of Hugging the Shore, 1983, there is a lovely picture of him in a boat. On the cover of Odd Jobs, ten years later, there is a picture of him looking like an escapee from a Ver-meer. I had pondered the change. In his autobiography he describes an Updike relative thus: "he had a booked nose and large-lidded eyes in deep sockets". In the family tra-lition, Updike's face is streamlined, pulling eway from e large nose, and his eyes are hooded by this back-

The fact is that I have felt myself to have a professional and personal relationship with Updike. That he had never heard of me, did not lessen the intensity of the feeling life and experience. He confirmed that the character Essie, who seeks the spotlight to hide her deficiencles, was very like him.

He had a sense of distinction even as he kicked his heels in Shillington, Pennsylvania, and a desire to get into the world of the media, though it was not called the media then." Harvard, two years as a staff writer on the New Yorker, retreat to New England at an early age and a productive lifetime of living by his pen, are proof that the distinction he imagined was real enough. I was surprised to find that he was still diffident about his position in the literary universe; ha suggested, for instance, that Bellow might be ahead of him. (Bellow, certainly, does certain things that Updike cannot, but Updike ranges far wider and risks far more.) But he was not unaware of his renown: "Eminent enough", he described himself. "I live in a pleasant back-

He is unfailingly generous about his first wife and his children. I said that I thought that In the although in his books some of his

We talked about the Rabbit cycle. He agreed that the Harry "Rabbit" Angstrom hooks are eeen as his masterpiece, although they are not his favourites. Interestingly, he cited The Coup as a wittier and more ludic work. Rabbit Angstrom has been accused, he said, of harbouring thoughts rather too intellectual for his station in life. I told him my view of the Rabbit cycle, that there was nothing to compar with it in our time, and he replied by saying its success was surprising, because it had been written in an off-hand, casual fashion.

The Rabbit books, like much of his work, deal very straight-for-wardly with sex. I asked about this, how to deal with sex being a problem writers often ponder: "Insofar I had a mission, I did see this as e frontier. My idea was to try to show it as it happened. I don't think I would have written the scenes with quite that enthusiasm now. Beckett's 'Endgame'

as the 20th century produced a greater playwright than Samuel Beckett? Certainly, as I watch his Endoame at the Donmar Warehouse, he seems to me its wittiest and its bleakest. And the combination of the wit and the bleakness is an enthralling, profound amalgam. The four people we see in Endgame are the dregs of humanity. Not only has life elsewhere apparently ground to a halt, not only are three of these four approaching the end of life, but also all four of them seem hardly ever to have lived. "Do you believe in the life to come?" asks Clov. Hamm, his father, replies "Mine was always that." Listening to this exchange - and many others like them - we hardly know whether to laugh or gasp.

There are, I think, a bundred thing: wrong with Katie Mitchell's staging of Endgome and a hundred nuances missed, but they seem unimportant beside the fact that she has made Endgome utterly alive and remarkably accessible.

The intense restraint of Beckett style is often hard even for the best actors. Feter Hall once wrote in his Diorics of rehearsing Peggy Ashcroft in Hoppy Days with Beckett present unless she is allowed to feel it all very strongly, she will never know what she is hiding. But the slightest sign of feeling disturbs Sam..." In this Endgame, Hamm and Clov are played by two of our finest actors, Alun Armstrong and Stephen Dillane; and they have mastered all the feeling of the play without yet having learnt how to hide it. This is especially obvious in physical terms. Armstrong employs a few slight arm gestures obviously too light and free for this character. Dillane (eyes wildly flickering from his haggard, bearded, face; body tilted beneath a hunchback and above a club (oot: hands ceaselessly plucking "aut his dirty coat) is like some Dickensian, even Kafkaesque, caricature, producing a restless, though muted. intensity that sometimes distracts from the deadly irony of his lines. And yet both are splendid. Armstrong is mordant, harsh, a petty Prospero exerting the pettiest of tyrannies over his household and reflecting pettily on his unimportant art. He is a dynamo involved in internal combustion. And Dillane's whole persona, as ever, conveys alienation at its most wry. He speaks the whole role between piano and pianissimo, only hitting a light, high mezzoforte on one short painful line: "All life long the same inanities."

the two smaller roles, Nagg and Nell, the same problem with Beckettian style is more apparent: too much feeling, too little nuance. And so, for example, when Harry Jones (Nagg) twice reminds Eileen Nicholas (Nell) of what she used, only yesterday, to be able to do for him, she says "Ah yesterday!" in a tone so suffused with sorrow that the wonderfully tender irony of the line is lost. Spoken impassively - Beckett's marking is "elegiac" - the line should hecome both funny and poignant, taking us way beyond Nell's own condi-

Rae Smith's set - a cobwebby neglected room - is perfect; Chris Davey's lighting casts eloquent light and shadow upon the actors. Whatever flaws this production has are the commendable flaws of very fine actors trying to find the right restraint for this laconic play. But the production succeeds because the actors and Mitchell let Beckett's lines take us out of this one dirty shell of a room. Parents and children, dying and living, power and dependence: the play, shocking us with moments of recogni tion, keeps opening windows beyond itself. The greatest of Beckett's ironies is that his bleak vision of existence without redemption fills us with wont is less platitudinous than it might seem to say that Mark Baldwin's choreographies are about dancing. Altogether too many of the dance experiments we see nowadays are turgid with "meaning" and their creators' messages about Life, Art, Sex, and the General Dreadfulness of Being. For them, making a dance is therapy, and I wish they would deal with it in private: they have neither the creative skill nor the wit to make their little offerings anything other than lumpen bores.

For Baldwin, the making of a if not always, fascinating - of movement that fixes for him (and for us) images that are as fleeting as thought. His is an art of allusion, of side-ways glances, sudden perceptions, sleight of hand and foot. Scale is small - aphorisms rather than epics - and the more welcome because of it. Movement bends, twists, goes off at a tangent, is unexpected. His pro-gramme at The Place as the week ended - part of the annual Spring Loaded jambo-ree - showed him at his best and (for me) his worst. The opening Homage was done in silence - though Baldwin habitually uses serious music, and uses it well. It centres on the splendid Paul Old, whose ability to dance fast and true and to eel in and out of rhythms and shapes is an abiding pleasure, and surrounds him with little hints and fragments of activity. It is like a series of haikus, and fine. By Baldwin's newest piece, Lash, I am intrigued but not held. The ingredients are Rakhmaninov piano preludes, four girls, and Mohammed Ali's statement "I am not a boxer. I am a dancer." Given these, you might imagine what happens, and it is the work's failing that this is exactly what happens, I thought it too long for its own good, and inconclusive. So was another recent piece.

Mirrors, which uses Ravel plano music (in unappealing live performance) and skitters in and out of a murder mystery with little side-tracks lnto Renaissance painting, Baldwin's grass-bopper creativity off from other ideas; allusions sparking fresh imaginative flights - is always interesting (Baldwin's own appearance, in the nude and on all fours as a faithful bloodhound, is typical of his dry jokiness.) But his language has a slightly over-extended air, as if thought has outstripped vocabulary, and the piece might with advantage be pruned. It is danced, as is everything in the evening, with splendid assurance by Shelley Baker, Lucy Bethune, Antonia Franceschi, Deborah Saxon, Vivien Wood and Paul Old: they are alert and mercurial as their dances. The evening ended with Vespri, made e couple of years ago, which contemplates a Monteverdi score but allows its mind to wander. It is as if Baldwin were visiting an Italian church and then became distracted by the life of the city around him. It is a clever and touching piece, serious but not solemn, and it does not betray

The private finance initiative would allow a future Labour government to increase public spending without raising taxes

We all know there is one really serious question left for Tony Blair. How would a Labour government pay for tor capital for public investbetter public services without ment. As now constituted, the raising the tax burden on middle-income Britain? Hard to believe, but the Conservatives seem intent on providing him servatives. with the answer.

In its familiar but stillpotent challenge over Labour's tax and spending plans lies the government's last slender bope of clinging to power. As they lurch from Thatcherite right to One-Nation left in a vain quest to redefine Conservatism, minis-ters know in their hearts that fear is all they have left. So civil servants across Whitehall have been told to put a price tag on every pledge, ambition and half-formed aspiration ever voiced by anyone who could be said to speak. Severn. however remotely, for Labour. For those of us without

Some time soon the ministers will aggregate the figures, multiply the total hy any number they care to think of, and proclaim that a Blair administration would empty the pockets of every taxpayer in the land. The arithmetic will be phoney, but, for as long as Mr Blair refuses to spell out his tax plans, it will have some resonance. I have vet to meet the voter who thinks a Labour government would spend less How ironic then that the government has offered Mr Blair an escape route, a tailor-made scheme which allows him to assure the nation that crumbling schools, decaying inner cities and overcrowded hospitals can be rebuilt without an extra penny piece from those swing voters in middle England. How piquant that the very same wheeze fits neatly with Mr Blair's determination to break once and for all his party's historical obsession with the demarca-tion lines between the state and the market.

This latter-day philosopher's stone goes by the name of the the Private Finance Initiative, the PFI for short. Do not be misled, though, by the White-ideological hang-ups about the proper role of the state, there is nothing inherently strange about the extension of the concept from roads and bridges to schools, prisons and hospitals. If a private contractor can build and run a hospital more cheaply and effectively than the department of health, both patient and taxpayer should reap the reward. The government does not have to own the bricks and mortar to meet its obligations to provide decent achools or secure (and bumane) prisons.

We must take the government's word for it that it will be cheaper for the private sector to spend now and the state to pay later

We are talking big bncks here. Granted, the Treasury has tended to err on the side of optimism, but it estimates that within two or three years the government will have signed PFI contracts involving capital expenditure of some £15bn. That is £15bn less to be borrowed by the state, or more relevant for the pres government, to be raised by

Too good to be true? Of course. The reality is that no-one, least of all the Treasury, has any idea whether the PFI will ultimately provide a good deal. The scheme has been designed for politicians in search of a free lunch. To that end, the likely cost has been deliberately obscured. But the bills will only begin to roll in five, 10 or 15 years hence. In its present form the PFI was launched in the dark autumn of 1992. Sterling had just been ejected from the European exchange rate mechanism. The recession seemed ever deeper and the government's finances were hurtling headlong into deficit. seemed a clever wheeze to perk up confidence by opening the doors to much greater private-sector involvement in renewing the nation's infra-

What had been intended as a supplement to existing pubinvestment, however, quickly became a substitute. Public borrowing was still too high and Mr Clarke needed to find money for tax cuts before the election. So, by the time of last November's Bndget, Whitehall departments were being told that direct capital expenditure would be approved only if they demonstrated that the relevant project could not be financed through the PFL The most obvious effect on the public finances is to reduce spending now and replace it with a stream of future liabilities. A private contractor picks up the hill for the construction of, say, a new prison, while the taxpayer guarantees it an income spread out over the lifetime of investment thus becomes tomorrow's current spending. It is, of course, more expensive for a private company to raise the necessary finance. For the time being, the Treasury still has a better credit rating. But the theory has it that the additional cost will be more than offset by efficiency gains. By transferring the risk of operating the new facility, the Treasury also creates a further incentive for the contractor to keep down the cost. The trouble is that the supposed savings are not quantifi able. We know that, like all off-balance aheet spending, the PFI flatters the official accounts. Future liabilities do not show up in the books. That, as far as the politicians are concerned, is the point. But, as the Commons Treasury committee concluded in a report earlier this week. we must take the government's word for it that It will be cheaper for the private sector to spend now and the state to pay later.

The details of contracts are hidden from parliament, as is the extent to which any risk is genuinely transferred from public to private sector. The Treasury pleads ignorance or commercial confidentiality. It seems there is no obligation on, say, hospital trusts to lodge centrally the details of potentially dodgy deals with local contractors. As for bigger projects, the mandarins declare that they cannot possibly give MPs the details of individual contracts. Forget accountability. Whitehall still

It is little wonder then that every time Labour is asked how it would repair the schools, rebuild the health service, or regenerate the inner cities, it grabs the PFI with both hands. I have a hunch, though. Mr Blair has a puritan streak. However conve nient it is now to play the Conservatives' PFI game, when he gets there he may well decide there are hetter ways to run a government than by fiddling the books.

Part-timers are not competent to make rational merger judgments

Sir, Your leading article did not go far enough in its condemnation of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's apparent approval of the takeovers of Midlands Electricity by PowerGen, and of Southern Electric by National Power ("MMC blows its circuits", April 15).

It is not just a matter of tha MMC reaching a perverse conclusion because the majority of the members of the relevant panel behaved as if they were implementing the old Labour party's industrial strategy of the 1970s and because the criteria by which the MMC operates give its members the freedom to decide

Planting the seeds of inevitable corruption

From Mr Chris Jones. Sir, For the head of state of a democratic, mixed-economy country to decide that a single private sector company has a unique role to play in his country's future is worrying ("ANC to deploy top people in private sector". April 16). For thet head of state to insist his party's secretary-general remains in his post and in parliament while taking up that company's deputy executive chairmanship is alarming.

I do not doubt the integrity of Nelson Mandela and Cyril Ramaphosa, but I do doubt their wisdom. By allowing the state, the ruling party, and large private sector companies to be linked through mutual control and interests, they are putting in place a system whereby future corruption is inevitable. Only by a clear separation of powers between state, legislature, political parties and the private sector can corruption be avoided. It is a matter of grim necessity that Africa's premier economic power turns back from this disastrous course.

Buck stops with education providers

From K.A. Willson. Sir, Your editorial "Better teaching" (April 9) rightly draws attention to the environment in which pupils learn at school. The buck has to stop with the providers the teachers who are supposed to instruct according to their contracts which includes the national curriculum, and the local authorities who should maintain the school's fabric. This has to be carried out within the budgets available.

All too often, local authorities have put off until tomorrow what should have been done today as regards normal maintenance and replacement By all means, let us have a General Teaching Council responsible for the evaluation and application of teaching requirements. The National Union of Teachers is not tha right body to decide the method to carry out teaching policy. It is, after all, a union. which seeks to exploit its position for the benefit of its members. Industrial unions do not dictate what is designed and manufactured; why should the NUT? Finally, how can a school pledge its assets in return for a commercial loan? Where is the collateral?

The allure of Gaullism

policy reflects a desire for France to play a more active role in world affairs

From resumption of nuclear testing to a much criticised mission to mediate in Lehanon, France

returning to a highly visible foreign policy that evokes the spirit of General de Gaulle. But what is the meaning of Gaullism in the post-cold war era?

Some see it as no more than a style of foreign policy, com-bining energy, a desire to act and a readiness to engage in confrontation beyond what self-interest might regard as necessary. Others see it as a way of looking at the world which transcends the day-to-day events to capture the real trends in global politics.

Harsher critics see Gaullism as a more tragic phenomenon, a desperate, even futile, attempt to establish a role in a world in which France, a defeated country in 1940, is no longer a great power or even a truly significant actor. In this view, Gaullism encourages France to overreach itself by trying to play a role beyond its means with a combination of flamboyant style, rhetoric and political willpower. Nearly one year after Jac-ques Chirac's election as president, the dehate about the true meaning of Gaullism carries more than pure theoretical interest. Every day brings new signals of Mr Chirac's attempts to rejuvenate Gaullist formulas. This is not mere imagemaking but reflects his deepest personal instinct and charac-

And it seems to work...at least with the French public. The polls show that Mr Chirac's essential message -which could be summarised as "France is back" - is popular with the French public. Foreign policy has helped the president transcend the social despair and economic pessi-mism which manifested themselves so spectacularly in the strikes last autumn.

France is back: Chirac has welcomed a series of world leaders to Paris (from top: with Li Peng, Yassir Arafat, Boris Yeltsin) early to say what the impact of this activist foreign policy will be. It has its undeniable charm and merits - but also its limits. contradictions and risks.

It will be tempting to call Jacques Chirac "Mister plus" since his foreign policy often adds up to little more than an assertive presentation of pol-icy. And although he is not a Europhile such as Jacques Delors or François Mitterrand. Mr Chirac is pursuing, after some hesitation, a traditional pro-European policy. He is as convinced as his predecessor, that France can only play a global role through Europe -and for that to work, Europe needs economic and monetary

On security, with a realism that may have shocked some arch-gaullists within his own camp, Mr Chirac has come to the conclusion that more Surope tomorrow means more Nato today. He believes that a East, from Asia to Africa, European defence policy can France is engaged in a flury of only be designed in the foreseediplomatic activity. It is too able future through close collaboration with the alliance. On world politics, Mr Chirac has set out a series of policies on the leading issues. For example, France wants to strengthen links across the Mediterranean to prevent it from becoming a gulf between north and south. As the wall has fallen between the eastern and western half of Europe, "a bridge must be built across the Mediterranean sea", Mr Chirac says eloquently. This vision is reinforced by a willingness to relaunch France's policy of playing a leading role in the Arab world which this time does not have an anti-Israeli or anti-American dimension as in the 1970s. France does not want to specialise in being the privileged interlocutor of pariah states such as Libya, Iraq or Iran. But she thinks she can play a role in the region which is complementary to thet of the US, which tends to be too identified with Israel pessimism so popular about the continent. Instead, it advocates support for the political status quo and still vague for mulas about the need for .

greater democracy. On Asia, Mr Chirac wants to promote a critical dialogue with China, within the framework of a more active and global dialogue between Europe and Asia - fully acknowledging the region's importance for the 21st cen-

Yet, there are clear limits to this approach. The first is the risk of not being taken seri-ously by others. "French agita-tion" is often met by the international community with a mixture of amusement and benign neglect - if not irrita-

If France wants to play the mediator in the Middle Eass and sends its foreign minister to the region, will it really have any impact beyond its nuisance value? Can France truly make a difference when the prestige, means and sheer clout of the Americans are not enough?

The second danger is that of contradictions. Can France, so unilaterally, act in ways that negate what she preaches— the creation of a common European foreign and security policy? France's willingness to act on foreign policy is not shared by a majority of coun-tries in Europe. Those that do share this vision - such as the UK - see France as much as a competitor as a model.

But the ultimate risk is that of confrontation with the US. a country with a vision of partnership which is often obscured by its instinct to take a leadership role. Things being what they are, France is con-demned to define herself in foreign policy terms vis à vis, if not against, the US. The personal and positive chemistry that exists between Mr Chirac and President Bill Clinton whose style is so similar may not always suffice to suppress the tensions.

Like General de Gaulle when he returned to power in 1958, Mr Chirac is launching a serd of new initiatives. Only time will tell if he will be as successful as his role model.

Buba's timely cut in rates

The Bundesbank is a pragmatist sheep in monetarist clothing. That clothing may be useful for fright-ening inflationary predators. But the Bundeshank has never believed it is necessary to dress like a wolf all the time. The case for lower short-term interest rates looked overwhelming. Even the international Monetary Fund said so in its latest World Economic Outlook. The response - a reduc-tion in the discount rate to a record low of 2½ per cent - should he good for Germany, Europe and he world economy. in recent years the Bundesbank has become expert in explaining away erratic monetary numbers. Since its target is the annualised increase in broad money (M3) over the average of the last quarter in the previous year, figures tend to be particularly erratic in the first few months of a year. in March of this year, for example, annualised growth was 12.2 per cent. in the corresponding month of 1995 it was minus 2.5 per cent, while it was 15 per cent in March 1994. The last year in which monetary growth in March was anywhere near the target was 1993.

Given this experience, Mr Hans Tietmeyer, the Bundesbank's president, was right to argue thet monetary growth could come into line with the target later in the year. The wider economic picture is far more important.

Consumer price inflation is running at below 2 per cent a year. Rates of interest on ten-year bunds are again below US levels historic standards. Gross domestic product shrank in the last quarter of 1995; it is thought to have done so again in the first quarter of 1996. GDP rose by a mere 5.1 per cent between the last quarters of 1991 and 1995, while February's industrial output was 8.8 per ceot less than it had been three years before. On Wednesday, the tradeweighted effective exchange rate had depreciated 4.7 per cent since a year before, but remained well above previous levels - 10 per cent a level matched only once before, between December 1987 and July 1988. With a repurchase (or "repo") rate of 3.3 per cent, it also has room for further easing in short-term interest rates before the new floor is hit. Bot real sbort-term rates of interest would remain positive. This being so, further cuts in the discount rate are not inconceivable, though they must be highly unlikely.

More probable is a strong economy recovery this year and in 1997, not just in Germany, hot throughout Europe. With the US economy expanding quite briskly and Japan recovering more strongly than expected as well 1997 may well see robust syn-chronised growth in the world economy. If so, the Bundesbank' cut would be the last significant easing in this economic cycle, as it decides to don its strict monetarist

Mad tactics

Io the dispute with continental Europe over mad cows, the UK government has been mept and hypocritical. Given the present acrimony hetween the UK and the rest of the European Union, this 'aries of misjudgments is unsurprising. However, it should take steps to correct them urgently; most important, it should drop its counterproductive plan, announced on Tuesday, to chal-lenge the EU's ban on British beef exports in the European Court of

It should have given more thought to its strategy before announcing last month that the possibility of a link with human brain disease seemed greater than had heen thought. It should also not have sorung that appoundement as a surprise on its bemused European

There is no need to compound these errors by denying that neighbouring countries have a right to act. Their wish to reassure purchasers of European beef and protect their own beef industries, by banning British beef, is perfectly understandable. The UK of all countries can hardly dis-enlightened national interest Since ministers have called for curbs on the jurisdiction of the European Court of Justice in response to recent decisions against them, the proposal to take this issue to it looks hypocritical. The UK has also repeatedly attacked Europe's Common Agricultural Policy, hat now seems more than willing to receive any compensation. There are plenty of good reasons to criticise the CAP, but the government should not try to have it both ways.

Mr John Major, the prime minis ter, now plans to step up diplomatic pressure in meetings with Moscow of the Group of Seven leading industrial nations. He may be able to persuade the other gov ernments to specify more clearly the criteria which would make British beef again acceptable. That could eventually prove helpful in bringing forward the date when exports resume.

But the government should real ise that there is only one real hope if export markets are to be durahly restored: eradication of BSE in British herds. Its suggested slaughter policy may eventually achieve that, though only if contaminated feed is, in fact, responsible for the disease.

The government has chosen to portray the sources of its troubles in the BSE flasco as lying overseas. They do not. They lie at home. That is where the solutions

Italy's choice

The government that Italy needs is unlikely to be the one it is going to get when voters go to the polis on Sunday. It needs a government with a strong mandate to carry cuit major constitutional reforms. They should include a better electoral system, reinforcement of the executive powers of the prime minister, reform of the civil serture, giving greater authority and initiative to the regions.

All the unofficial opinion surveys suggest the election will be a close-run thing. But the coalitions of the right and the centre-left are clumsy constructions, full of cootradictions, and neither has offered clear policy alternatives. It would be surprising if a strong government emerged, simply because there are so many parties

Italy has never had a government dominated by the left, and it is certainly not going to get one this time round. If the centre-left Olive Tree alliance gains a majority, it will be because it has taken the cantre with it. That might softeo the almost visceral fear in Italy of the left in power. It would pevertheless be an historic ange, bringing former Communists into government. But the change might be more apparent than real, for the alliance is committed to the policies of hudgetary discipline initiated by the technocratic governments since 1992. Ironically, the financial markets appear to view the centre-left as more likely to form a responsible government, with better qualified ministerial material, than the Freedom Alliance oo the right. There are obvious contradictions between the right-wing partners Mr Silvio Berlusconi's Forza Italia espouses a free market philosophy in contrast to the corporatist interventionist inclination of Mr Gianfranco Fini's National Alliance. They have failed to convince the markets that they have a clea policy on vital issues like privati-sation, and they risk being financially irresponsible in making good their electoral promises of tax cuts and job creation.

If voters still opt for the right, it will demonstrate the instinctive conservatism of the Italian elector ate, and its mistrust of the left. rather than a positive choice. For the right was incompetent in government in 1994, it can boast few qualified people as ministers, and it has shown little sign of learning from its mistakes. Mr Fini may have turned himself into a convincing democrat, but he is handicapped by a party which cannot forget its fascist roots. Italy's European partners are unlikely to get the clear result they would like. The Freedom Alliance gives conflicting signals, at one moment favouring greater integration, at the next sounding nationalistic. The centre-left is at least consistent in looking to Brussels for the external discipline especially financial - which Italy still fails to provide itself.

told foreign correspondents. Most analysts agree that, with a couple of exceptions, Brazil's private sector banks remain strong. Banks such as Bradesco and Itau, among the largest in the continent, are conservatively provisioned and act as a bulwark against any systemic crisis. Mr Fernão Bracher, a private sector banker in São Paulo. says that in cases like Banco do Brasil, the government should be praised for finally admitting the true scale of the problem. "How nice that transparency has arrived. However, the various problems

afflicting the banking sector could dull the expected economic recov-ery in the second half of the year. The government is forecasting 4 per cent growth this year, compared night deposits on which they often did not have to pay interest. When inflation and high interest rates fell. with 4.2 per cent in 1995. Most is expected in the second half of the year, as falling interest rates take effect. Real annual interest rates a year ago, when the government feared rampant domestic demand would stoke inflation. But at the present rate of about 27 per cent, they are still extremely high by international standards. "We cannot expect international levels of interest rates with our inflationary history, and the Real's short track record," says Mr Gustavo Loyola,

Central Bank president. Some economists worry that uncertainty stemming from the banking troubles could threaten further rate cots and lower economic growth. With important state-owned banks, such as Banco do Brasil and Banespa, involved in lending reviews and cost cutting, the credit needed for economic growth may ha slow in coming. Morgan Stanley, the US investment bank, last month cut its growth to 3.1 per cent, and some Brazilian economists are even more cautious. Lower than expected growth would spell bad news for tax revennes and the government's budget deficit, which last year reached nearly 5 per cent of GDP, its poorest performance since 1989. The deficit is expected to fall this year to about 3 per cent, mainly thanks to lower interest costs for the government's deht, but spending pressures con-tinua to mount, The government's payroll costs, for example, doubled to about R$36bn between 1992 and last year. The capital injection at Banco do Brasil will add at least R$2.2bn to this year's hudget.

nstability in the banking system is also complicating Mr Cardoso's already delayed reforms, which are needed to cut government spending and to modernise the economy. His opponents have tried to use concern about the banking system to stall Congressional voting on some reforms, many of which are plans to privatise Banespa, owned hy Sao Paulo's state government, to protect his coalition majority. Some analysts predict Brazil's banking problems will never be fully solved until the links between politicians and banks are broken. Mr Cardoso wants to reduce spending pressures on the govern-ment's budget so central and state governments can revert to investing in areas like health and edocation, which were overlooked during the troubled 1980s. Last year, be announced ambitious social security reforms to stop early retirement and prevent special interest groups receiving inflated pensions. He planned to lift the constitutional restrictions on firing public servants, whose wages eat up more than 90 per cent of some states monthly tax revenue. He also prom-

make hiring and firing expensive. More than a year after these ideas were put forward, little has been achieved. Mr Cardoso mada good s in lifting state monopolies in the electricity and telecommuni-cations sectors. But more controversial reforms like social security ran into opposition in Congress, where his coalition majority is weak and relies on shifting personal interests among political leaders, rather than ideological commitment.

tem and address labour laws which

The social security reform, which the lower house of Congress has passed but which still needs Senate approval, was last week put on hold after a court injunction questioned its constitutionality. The reform is still likely to go ahead, but analysts say government concessions to get the bill through Congress have stripped out most of its original ideas, including important proposals to encourage private pension funds and lift Brazil's low savings rate. "We'll have to try again in a few years," one official sighs.

by municipal elections, dne in Octoher. Most of Mr Cardoso's ideas require constitutional amendments, which need the assent of three fifths of both houses of Congress. in theory, his coalition has just over three-fifths of the votes in the lower house. But many supporters are likely candidates in the elections. and fear that approving controversial changes, like sacking civil servants, could be used against them. Faced with this problem, the reform programme may make little progress in the second half of the year. Mr Cardoso's position is also weakened because he is expected, probably next year, to seek a consti-tutional amendment to allow him to run for re-election in the 1998 presidential race. The re-election debate will take attention away from reforms and give his opponents in Congress a strong bargaining chip.

talented builder of consensus who has managed to restart his stop-go reform programme in the past. But there are worries that, given the election calendar, he has acted too slowly and given up too much in order to keep his proposals on course. "He's paying a much higher price in Congress than be should or needs to do," says Mr André Lara Resende, a Sao Paulo economist. Mr Cardoso's supporters insist that modernising Brazil must be a slow process because of the country's size and complicated political system. But the disappointing pace of reform so far, and the fact that rule changes in areas like tax and social security can take several years to take effect, mean delay is an expensive option.

This suggests lower economic growth, and companies are already hlaming high borrowing costs for depressed profits and rising unemployment, which reached 5.7 per cent in February compared to 4.3 per cent a year ago. With the public sector in deficit, the government case it stoked domestic demand. sucking in imports and raising wor ries aboot the current account deficit. This reached R$17bn last year, still only 3 per cent of GDP, which economists believe can be financed. Most Brazilians continue to support Mr Cardoso in opinioo polls and remain enthusiastic about the Real and lower inflation. But the slow pace of reforms is affecting them too because it delays the government's ability to address Brazil's glaring social problems. The governmant's hudget deficit problem. which the reforms are meant to address, is blamed for the country's poor education record, falling health spending and rising violence.

"You need strong growth to address our social deficit. If not, things can become complicated, says Mr Lauro Vieira de Faria, a Very disappointing is the report of the Great Western of Brazil Railway, though the circumstances which rendered the results of the past year unfavourable appear to have been mainly beyond the control of the management. Tha decrease in freight traffic is attributed to beavy rains, which delayed the crushing of cane, and the rise in expenditure mainly to an increase in wage which was forced upon the company by a strika. Moscow plans buy-back of top company shares

The Russian government plans to buy back shares in some of the country's most valuable companies, which were privatised under a controversial scheme last

The measure was ordered by Mr Victor Chernomyrdin, prime minister, at a cahinet meeting yesterday. Although Mr Chernomyrdin insisted the government was not backing down from privatisation in general or from the shares-for-loans scheme in particular, the plan could raise fears about the security of property acquired through privatisa-

As the election draws nearer, many government figures, led by President Boris Yeltsin, have shifted away from reformist policies towards the more popular leftwing agenda of the Communist party. One cablnet minister has called for outright renationalisation of most of Russia's blue chip companies, and at yesterday's cabinet meeting one senior official openly called for the government to pursue a policy of "nationalisation" and "confisca-

Mr Alfred Koch, deputy head of the state privatisation agency which conducted the initial anctions, said the government would seek to huy back shares in at least four of the 12 companies which were sold off under the shares-for-loans programme. The target list includes Yukos, Surgutneftegaz and Sibneft, three big oil companies, as well as Norilsk Nikel.

Mr Koch said the commercial banks, main beneficiaries of the shares-for-loans scheme, might also agree to an extension of the deadline for a government huy-back until the end of the European parliament urges changes to unit pricing law

The European parliament has agreed to ease the hurden on small husinesses by allowing a six-year period of grace to a proposed new pricing system which insisted that goods be marked per unit of weight or volume.

The dual-pricing system was designed to make it easier for consumers to compare prices of packaged goods, such as jam, ice cream and soap, by obliging shopowners to provide both the selling price of the item and the price per unit of quantity.

A concerted campaign by retailers argued that the law would impose beavy costs on shops and put many out of husiness. In response, the parliament has asked the European Commission to draw up a cost assessment of the system as a precondition to implementation. MEPs also extended the transismall businesses "where unit pricing is likely to constitute an excessive burden". Mr Stephen Alambritis, spokesman for the Federation of Small Businesses which represents 90,000 British companies, said: "This is definitely a step in the right direction and we welcome the more flexible approach." Consumer organisations also welcomed the parliament's pro-posed changes. "The parliament has found a medium way to balance the interests of consumers and small and medium-sized enterprises," said Ms Caroline Kerstes, a legal adviser for BEUC, a pan-European consum-ers' organisation.

The measure will be considered by consumer affairs ministers next week when it is likely to be substantially approved because the consumer and business organisations accept it.

states to exempt certain goods if they considered that using the new system would be meaning-less. In the case of non-food products, member states will have to draw up lists of products whose unit price need not be indicated. The parliament also voted to extend the list of exceptions, voting to exclude food sold in hotels, cafes, restaurants, schools and hospitals. They also want mobile vendors, products sold in vending machines and sales by auction excluded from the directive.

Anticipating the introduction of a singla European currency. the proposed directive says that in a transitional period just after its introduction, shops would have to display three prices - the selling price in the national currency as well as the selling price and the unit price in the single currency. Clinton ends visit to Japan as trade gap falls

US President Bill Clinton yesterday by reporting a 27 per cent fall in its politically sensitive trade surplus with the US for the year Mr Clinton reminded Japanese MPs that the importance both sides placed on their security alliance did not diminish the US desire to see more progress in opening the Japanese market.

Mr Clinton's address to parliament, the first by a US president since 1983, was mostly devoted to reaffirming the US-Japan secureaffirming the US-Japan secu-rity partnership, the main sub-ject of his summit on Wednesday with Mr Ryutaro Hashimoto, prime minister. He appealed to Japan to "forge a partnership for leadership" with the US, but also observed that bilateral trade relations "were not free of friction".

The decline in Japan's surplus, confirmed by yesterday's data, has helped Washington tone down dsmands on Tokyo and eased pressure on the yea. Tha overall trade gap shrank by 18.4 per cent to $96.2km, the second

Exports overall rose 7.7 per pent to $440.1bn, with sales to Asian countries up nearly 17 per cent to $192.8bn, surpassing Japan's exports to the US and Europe for the first time since the ministry started comparable records in 1971. Japanese sales to the US and Europe reached $188.8bn.

With a now weaker yen, just under Y108 to the dollar yester-day, some economists believe the rate of import growth might slow. That view was supported by yesterday's data showing that imports rose 10 per cent in March, slower than the average growth of the previous year. THE LEX COLUMN

Bundesbank balance

The Bundesbank's aggressive half-point discount rate cut yesterday managed to please both the interna-tional markets and the domestic audience. By underlining its determination to help fuel German economic growth and damp down the D-Mark, the central bank gave the appearance of put-ting domestic considerations first. But it managed to do so without sacrificing any credibility in the eyes of the international markets.

By leaving the repo rate unchanged, the central bank lent credence to its claim that it is still committed to using money supply as its main yard-stick - and allowed tha market to cling to the hope of further bond price gains, even though this discount rate cut is viewed as the last in the cycle. In fact, even though the next move is likely to be up, this is not yet on the horizon, given the weakness of the German economy.

All this means that for the time being there is no reason for German bond yields to move back above US Treasury yields - though they are likely to to be dragged higher by US yields, if the US market continues to weaken. Equally, though, the current gap of around a % percentage point is unlikely to widen much further, as the hund market is still overshadowed by the prospect of European monetary union further down the road.

Pharmaceuticals

First-quarter results from the world's big drugs companies show the industry's recovery during 1995 was no fluke. Merck, Warner-Lambert and Schering-Plough of the US yesterday reported sales increases of 13-19 per cent. Sandoz in Switzerland recorded a 9 per cent rise in underlying drug sales and SmithKline Beecham, despite a weak fin season, managed 6 per cent. Across the industry, volume growth is running in double figures - three years ago it was negligible.

One reason for this is a series of product launches. New medicines, such as Merck's cholesterol-lowering agent Zocor and Pfizer's Norvasc heart treatment, are growing rapidly. Even in today's cost-conscious environment, innovative products can command premium prices. As important has been a growing understanding among powerful managed care buyers that drugs are often the most cost-effective treatment. Some of those managed care organisations which tried to save money by restricting the choice of drugs available to patients have actually seen healthcare costs rise due to longer hospital stays and increasing admissions.

FT-SE Eurotrack 200: 10-year bond yields

Given the industry's fragmentation, consolidation will continue to feature. But buoyant organic growth coupled with high share prices suggests the emphasis will switch further from takeovers to mergers and asset swaps.

European cars

Peugeot-Citroen has emerged as the latest in a long list of victims of a dour European car market, with operating profit margins almost halved last year. At least it achieved a profit, unlike arch-rival Renault, but its cut in an already parsimonious dividend speaks volumes about the immediate outlook.

Investors may have gained some comfort from the strong pick-up in European vehicla sales in the first quarter, but heavy discounting to clear stocks means the rest of the year will be disproportionately sluggish. Car sales growth is unlikely to exceed 3 per cent this year, compared with 7 per cent in the first quarter. Even in France, where an 8 per cent increase suggests respite from the gloom. growth has been in smaller cars where margins have been stripped to tha

With only a small sales upturn expected in 1997, the winners among the manufacturers will be those with the best new models and lowest costs. UK economy

Britain's government keeps promis-ing to bring its public sector borrowing requirement (PSBR) down to zero within a few years. Mysteriously, this admirable ambition seems to be endlessly deferred. Yesterday's news that last year's PSBR totalled £32bn after three years of robust economic growth is a case in point: 18 months ago, the chancellor was cheerily claiming the figure would be down to £21.5bn by now. Ah yes, replies the government, but it is not our fault: public spending is under control; the real problem is a mysterious shortfall in tax revenues So what? If the government's fiscal policy is too lax, the fact that it is accidental is irrelevant.

The figure is worrying for three reasons. First, measuring the PSBR no longer tells the whole story. The government is spending growing amount through its private finance initiative much of this is borrowing by another name, but is not counted in the statistics. Second, whatever the tax system's structural problems, the chances of much fiscal tightening in the next pre-election Budget look minimal. Third, the government is also unlikely to put interest rates up before the election – despite asset prices and the money supply growing strongly.

For gits, the combination of lax fiscal and monetary policies over the next year looks a pretty noxious cocktail.

RMC Group

Despite yesterday's profits warning. RMC still looks one of the best bets in the building materials sector. The difficult market conditions which prompted the warning are afflicting the whole industry. RMC is exposed to both the sharp drop in demand in Germany and the poor UK housing market. But there is reason to hope that any downturn will be

The bad winter and a strong performance last year are exacerbating RMC's underperformance in the first half. The second half should look better, partly because the comparison is against a weaker half last year, and against a weaker hair last year, and partly because the UK housing market is now showing real signs of picking un; And after yesterday's rate cut; even the gram German market looks bloser to an upturn.

Still, this year's profits may well coine in below last year's record. The argument for sticking it out is that the RMC management has a strong track record and the shares look relatively cheap, at only a slight premium to the sector. Furthermore, since the sector has so far underperformed the housebuilders, there is probably further scope for recovery, as the UK market

Last year, anticipating the way the wind would blow, Bundy established a manufacturing presence in Hungary. This was the first move into Eastern Europe for Bundy, the only supplier of a complete range of evaporator and condenser systems. With eight manufacturing facilities now serving Europe's potential £400 million market for its refrigeration products, the outlook for Bundy is bright. Bundy is one of II Group's three specialised engineering businesses, the others being John Crane and Dowty. Each one is a rechnological and market leader in its field. Aker shares jump 7% as chief resigns

CITHE FINANCIAL TIMES LIMITED 1996

Shares in Aker, the Norwegian offshore engineering and cement group, jumped more than 7 per cent yesterday following surprise news that Mr Tom Rund, chief executive, is to resign amid one of the most intriguing corporate power struggles seen in Norway.

Mr Rund's departure, announced after a board meeting on Tuesday, was blamed on differences over strategy with Mr Gerhard Heiberg, chairman and Mr Rnud's predecessor as chief Mr Heiberg, best known as the organiser of the 1994 Lillehammer winter Olympics, said he wanted a more powerful expan-sion by Aker in its offshore construction business than Mr Ruud was pursuing. Investors reacted enthusiasti-cally, pushing up Aker's most-traded A-share by NKr9 to NKr130 yesterday.

But representatives of several hig shareholders publicly dis-tanced themselves from what they saw as the unwarranted removal of Mr Ruud, prompting speculation that Mr Heiberg might come under pressure to versy in the UK. The popular British view of bosses' pay is still coloured by class. The lottery winner or sports star is accepted as an ordinary person who got lucky. The boardroom millionaire is resented as an exploiter of privilege. The US view is more egalitar-

ian. Despite the sharp rises in executive pay in recent years, compensation packages running to many millions raise few eyebrows. What matters increasneration is more questionable. Of his package last year, worth a potential $16m, $9.7m comes in the form of share options related to the break-up of the company.

As Mr Allen pointed out repeatedly on Wednesday, the options are at present worthless. They depend on the AT&T share price reaching various trigger points over the next four years: an increase of 10 per cent by year one, 20 per cent by year two and so on. The figure of $9.7m is notional, as calculated by the so-called Black-Scholes pricing model used to value options under US regulations. The issue is rather one of priningly is the rate of increase, and whether it is perceived as fair. This hrings us hack to Mr Allen. The starting point for the row over his compensation is the decision last September to demerge various parts of AT&T. and the related announcement of up to 40,000 job cuts.

The cuts, though clumstly handled, are in part defensible. The US telecommunications industry is going through rapid change, largely because of government deregulation. Other US phone companies are likely to cut their workforces by similar proportions, though doubtless with less

Mr Allen is a life-long AT&T employee, and bears chief responsibility for the break-up plan. Common decency suggests that he should stay on and do his best to make the plan work. Why should he be paid an extra $10m for doing so?

At Wednesday's annual meeting in Miami, the issue of fairness was much on shareholders' minds. They applauded the unseat the directors received only 6 per cent of the vote. Alleo has not done too badly from an institutional view-point. AT&T's shares may bave underperformed the market by 4 per cent last year. But without the break-up plan, which caused the price to jump sharply, they would have done a lot worse.

The US can show more glaring examples of high pay linked to poor performance. Business Week, for instance, points to Mr Michael Eisner, chairman of Walt Disney, who has earned a total of $228m in the past three years and has achieved a total returo, inclinding dividend, in that period of just 39 per cent.

Nevertheless, the case of AT&T is symptomatic. The row over Mr Allen bas been going on for To be sure, some of this was months, in an era of downsizin and white collar angst, the fairness of top people's remuneration is an issue which will not go

China may delay BT/C&W go-ahead

China is likely to take up to a year to decide whether to approve a merger between British Telecommunications and Cable and Wireless, according to investment bankers in the region.

Their conclusion adds weight to the belief that if the two UK telecoms companies are able to agree a merger, they will announce the broad outlines of the deal long before the necessary regulatory and political hurdles have been overcome. China's approval is essential if any merger is to go ahead.

Yesterday shares in C&W gained 24p to close at 546p while BT shares rose 61/2p to close at 379p on expectations of an early conclusion. A merger would create the only truly giobal telecoms company, capitalised at about £34bn.

Neither BT nor C&W is prepared to talk about the progress of the merger discussions hat sources say both companies are prepared for protracted negotiations with the Chinese anthori-

They point to the fact that the alliance between BT and MCI. the second largest US long distance carriar, wherehy BT acquired a 20 per cent stake of the US company, took 12 months to gain the approval of European and US regulators. A China specialist, whose advice has been sought by BT, rejected ideas that Beijing was against the deal at this stage. "BT will not encounter overt hostillty simply because it is British or because of the nature of the deal. What BT must do is to be prepared to enter into a long-term process of persuading the Chinese that the deal will be good for them. it comes to onderstanding the Chinese. So far, there bave been no high antborities, although Mr Alan Rndge, deputy chief executive and the company's chief technologist, visited Beijing as part of a technical delegation last week. C&W has been dealing in and with China for more than a century and its experience could prove invaluable. Earlier this year Dr Brian Smith, C&W chairman, visited Beijing and met Mr Jiang Zemin, the Chinese president. Mr Zemin's approval is likely to be necessary for the merger to go ahead. Sources close to the talks reit-

and Sydkraft buy stakes in Swedish utility

By Grag Mctvor in Stockholm

The restructuring of the deregulated Nordic electricity market intensified yesterday as Electricité de France, the French energy group, and Sydkraft, Sweden's second-largest power sup-plier, both purchased large stakes in Graninge, the Swedish power ptility.

The EdF move involved Skanska, Sweden's biggest construction company, selling its 25 per cent interest in Graninge to EdF's Swedish subsidiary, Northelec. In return, Skanska received a 50 per cent holding in Northelec from a new share issue, in a deal valued at SKr2.3bn ($340m).

Separately, Sydkraft, Sweden's second-largest power supplier, announced it had purchased a 20 per cent tranche of Graninge for about SKrl.8bu from Robur, the Swedish bank. The moves mark the latest development in a jockeying for position on the Nordic power

market by groups involving Swedish, Finnish and Norwegian operators, as well as outsiders Complicating the picture, EdF is a large shareholder in Sydkraft with 10 per cent of its capital, making it the second-largest single shareholder after Preussen Elektra of Germany. Sydkraft, based in Malmö, was lukewarm to the French group when it hought shares in the utility in September 1994 and has declined to grant EdF a place on its board. Sydkraft said yesterday it was interested in extending its sbare in Graninge. But Mr Lars Fri thiof, the group's senior vice-president, stressed the move into Graninge was not hostile to EdF and said Sydkraft was happy to work alongside the French group. EdF declined to comment. Mr Bo Källstrand, Graninge chief executive, said EdF and Sydkraft were committed to long-term ownership and there was room for both in Graninge. Graninge, Sweden's sixthlargest power supplier, is strengthening its market presence and last week purchased a 13.4 per cent stake in Gullspangs Kraft, another Swedish supplier for SKrl.1hn.

Both yesterday's deals were based on a price of SKr135 for each Graninge share, reflecting an initial premium oo the opening price of 11.5 per cent. The transactions belped lift Graninge's shares to SKr132.5, an increase of SKr14.5 on the day. In the past month its shares have

Charge forces Swissair into red for first time

By Thierry Meyer in Zurich

Swissair, the national carrier, yesterday reported a SFrl47m ($120m) net loss for 1995, the first time it has reported a deficit. This was mainly dne to extraordinary provisions of SFr365m for restructuring.

While operating profits rose from SFr131m in 1994 to SFr237m, and cash flow increased from SFr519m to SFr598m, Swissair's core business continued to lose money: in 1995, air transport operations for the parent airline company posted a SFr200m loss. "Our operating result for 1995 was the best we have produced in the last five years," said Mr Hannes Goetz, chair man. He said the strength of the Swiss franc and the severe drop in fare prices had neutralised cost-saving efforts.

"In five years we have lost SFr500m in currency exchange, and while our productivity has gained 33 per cent, fare revenues have dropped 40 per cent," he explained.

Mr Goetz also protested against state subsidies to Euro-pean competitors, which prevent any realistic forecasts in the airline business.

After two rounds of costcutting, the Swissair group is undergoing a thorough restructuring, under the guid-ance of Mr Philippe Bruggisser, chief operating officer. He is to replace Mr Otto Loepfe as chief executive officer by January 1

Peageot Motor, the big UK subsidiary of Peageot-Citroen, said pre-tax profits fell from £9.5m last year to £4.9m

It blamed the decline on the difficult UK market, with demand remaining soft, competition rising - especially in the fleet market - and an age-

share, which slipped to 7.4 per cent from 7.7 per cent in 1994, even though sales rose to a record £1.79bn from £1.7bn in

Earnings were also affected by the rise in the French franc against sterling. Although the local content of the 306 – Peugeot's only UK-built model - stands at about 65 per cent of its total value, profitability remains highly vulnerable to exchange rates because many essential components, such as the engine, gearbox and pressings, come from France.

Peugeot-Citroën, the French car group, yesterday reported a 45 per cent decline in 1995 net profits to FFr1.7bn ($332m). after what it termed a "disappointing" year in which group output also fell by 5 per cent to 1.88m vehicles.

PSA - the Peugeot-Citroen group - also cut its dividend to ing product mix.
The difficulties were reflected in Peugeot's market FFr5 a share, from FFr6 in 1994. The shares fell almost 2 per cent from FFr745 to FFr731. Mr Jacques Calvet, the Peugeot president, blamed the nearhalving of group profits from the 1994 level of FFr3.1bn on a series of factors, including weak demand outside Europe for his company's products, the fall of several European currencies against the franc, and last December's strikes in He said prospects for 1996 were "rather sombre" and in particular inveighed against "the anti-diesel campaign" being waged by environmentalists, the petroleum industry and the French treasury to tinued to raise productivity in the UK, with a 39 per cent jump since mid-1994. Over that period, output at Peug-eot's Ryton plant has risen from 1,600 to 2,275 cars a week, while the workforce has been trimmed to 2,700 following the latest 100 job losses.

Mr Calvet also claimed that among the purely European car groups, PSA had done worse than Fist but better than VW and Renault in terms of pre-tax profits as a proportion of turnover last year

But PSA sales fell slightly last year to FFr164.2bn, from FFr166bn the year before. The group's operating margin fell more sharply, from FFr7.29on in 1994 to FFr3.75bn last year, because of the impact of currency depreciations against the franc - which Mr Calvet said cost the group FFr1.3bn - and because of a rise in commercial promotion costs to counter increased competition.

Sales outside Europe fell to 12.3 per cent of total sales last year, from 12.8 per cent in 1994, with improved business in Asia and eastern Europe insufficient to offset a drop in Latin American sales.

Mr Calvet confirmed that PSA was actively considering returning to the North American market, but had concluded it could only do this with models specifically tailored to that market and with "the industrial co-operation of a partner". He added "we have not yet found such a partner".

Within the overall group results, the Peugeot car com-pany made a profit while Citroën recorded a loss, Mr Calvet said, though this was mainly due to the different the French market, and took 12 per cent of the European mar-ket - against 12.8 per cent in financial structures of the two

By Frances Williams in Geneva

The strong Swiss franc hit first quarter sales figures for Sandoz and Ciba, the Swiss pharmaceuticals companies due to merge later this year to form Novartis, the world's second-big-

Ciba's sales fell 2 per cent to SFr5.35bn ($4.36bn), compared with a rise in local currencies of 2 per cent. Sandoz boosted sales by 2 per cent from SFr3.91bn to SFr3.98bn, an increase in local currencies of 6 per cent. The figures exclude its former industrial chemicals division, Clarlant, which was spun off last year. Roche, the third of the large Basle-based maceutical groups, last week announced a 6 per cent rise in first quarter sales in Swiss franc terms, against a 10 per cent jump in local currencies.

Ciba's healthcare sector increased sales in local markets by 4 per cent over the year to the first quarter, with competition in the US to Voltaren, Ciba's best-selling anti-rheumatic drug, was more than offset by new drug launches in the US and Europe.

Sales of the agriculture segment were up 7 per cent in local currencies. However, turnover at the industry division - due to be spun off as part of the Novartis deal - declined 3 per cent in local currencies.

IMPORTANT NOTICE FOR THE ATTENTION OF FORMER EMPLOYEES, THEIR FAMILY MEMBERS AND DEPENDANTS

To all individuals who may be or may become interested as beneficiaries in any assets subject to the trusts of the ICIC Staff Benefit Trust and/or the BCCI Staff Benefit Trust ("the Trusts"). Such individuals ("the scheme members') comprise principally any past or present directors, officers and employees of BCCI Holdings (Luxembourg) SA and of any of its subsidiary or associated or affiliated companies (including Bank of Credit and Commerce International S.A. and Bank of Credit and Commerce International (Overseas) Limited) and the dependents and family members of such individuals.

Hearings will be held (1) in the Grand Court of the Cayman Islands commencing on 27 May 1996; and (2) in the High Court in London commencing on 4 June 1996 at which orders will be sought binding all scheme members to a settlement of litigation in the Cayman Islands and England and of other matters relating to the Trusts.

The main issues in the litigation, to which some of the scheme members are parties, concern the validity of the Trusts and alleged breaches of trust by the principal BCCI and ICIC Companies in particular in relation to a subvention payment of US$150 million made in 1986. The proposed settlement is conditional on the Courts making Orders binding all scheme members to its terms whether or not they are parties to the litigation. Certain scheme members have been appointed by the Courts to represent the interests of all scheme members who are not themselves parties to the litigation.

As part of the proposed settlement, an appeal in the Luxembourg Courts brought by former BCCI employees, including members of the BCCI Campaign Committee, challenging the proposed agreement between the BCCI Liquidators and the Abu Dhabi Government has been withdrawn.

The principal terms of the proposed settlement are:

- 1. The release of all claims (including counterclaims) by the scheme members which they have or may have in connection with or arising out of the Trusts and discontinuance of the litigation.
- 2. The payment of US$50 million to a new Trust to be held by independent trustees (whose appointment is to be approved by the Courts) on behalf of the scheme members in accordance with the terms of a Trust Deed to be approved by the Courts.

OIAG to sell 3.5m shares in OMV

OIAG, the Austrian state holding group, said yesterday it would sell 3.5m shares in the oil and gas concern OMV in a secondary share offering next month. At the current market price the placement would be worth about Sch3.45bo ($325m). Lead managers are Bank Austria and Raiffeisen Zentralbank for the domestic tranche, and Merrill Lynch and Lehman Brothers for the international tranche.

The offering will cut the government's holding in Austria's largest industrial group from 49.9 per cent to 37 per cent. OIAG said it might add another 523,000 shares in case of strong demand. This would not another Sch500m and would leave the state with only 35 per cent. The proceeds would be used to reduce OIAG's debt load, caused by heavy losses in the aluminium group AMAG in the early 1990s. Separately, OMV said its pre-tax earnings in the first quarter were roughly unchanged from Sch950m a year ago.

Kimberly-Clark shares slip on warning

By Maggie Urry in New York

A warning of lower than expected earnings in 1996 soured the first full quarter's results from Kimberly-Clark since its merger with Scott Paper in December.

Mr Wayne Sanders, chairman and chief executive officer, said in December that analysts' forecasts of earnings per share of $4.94 in 1996 were "realistic". However, he said yesterday that recent price falls for pulp and tissue prod-octs meant "it is unlikely that we will achieve the previous estimate".

The group's shares fell $1% to $71 in early trading in New York. Kimberly-Clark makes tissue, newsprint, nappies and other paper products, and owns brand names such as Huggies, Pull-Ups, Andrex, Scottex and Kleenex.

Kimberly-Clark announced a rise in first-quarter earnings from $200m in the same period Mexican sales fall 13% in opening quarter

A contracting domestic market and fewer opportunities to carry out import substitution pushed down first-quarter sales for Kimberly-Clark de México, the country's largest paper manufacturer. However, operating margins improved, helped by falling pulp prices, writes Daniel Dombey in Mexico City.

First-quarter sales fell 13 per cent to 1.58bn pesos ($212m) compared with the first three months of last year, when import substitution was at its height following the peso devalua-

Before the devaluation, imports accounted for some 20 per cent of the paper sector. Despite a severe recession during 1995, Kimberly notched up a 17 per cent increase in sales for the year. Kimberly could not keep import substitution up at the same rate," said Mr Jorge Beristain, a senior analyst at Caspian Research in Mexico City. "It had to run out of steam."

The company also said that volumes had been affected by a fall in pulp prices.

A merger has been approved between Kimberly-Clark de México and Crisoba, a subsidiary of Scott Paper, and the new company will begin reporting as a single entity from the second

He said "the steep decline in the pulp market this year and

Mr Sanders said the merger with Scott was "proceeding rapidly according to plan" and the benefits were already beginning to show up on the bottom line". It would yield cost savings of at least $250m in 1996 and of $500m by 1998, he said

Mr Pieper, known as a com-puter industry turnround specialist, replaced Mr James Treybig, Tandem's founder, who led the company for more than 20 years.

Revenue improved through-out the quarter, said Mr Pie-per. Sales in the Americas were stronger than expected. while Europe was weaker. Other regions were on target. For the fiscal year to date, Tandem reported revenues of $1.09bn, compared with $1.05bu in the same period a year ago.

The net loss for the first six months of fiscal 1996 was $48m, or 41 cents a share, including the $52m restructuring charge and a $31m gain from a disposal. In the same period of 1995, earnings were $57m - including $9m from disposals - or 48 cents a share.

In an era of outsourcing, DPC stands out as a company which relies almost exclusively on its own resources for proses ranging from electronic and mechanical hardware manufacture to writing, designing and printing its own promot-ional literature, labels and calendars.

Although powerless in the face of political forces, such as health funding strictures in Italy which have cut demand for immuno-diagnostic equipment 30 per cent in five years, Dr Ziering says DPC has actually been helped by the corporate juggling among multinationals such as industry leader Abbott Laboratories and Boehringer Mannheim,

"People at large companies are always having to develop or adapt to new rules and strategies. Look at the way [Britain's] Amersham has changed hands, going to Eastman Kodak and then to Johnson & Johnson," he says, "Uncertainty like that is good for us...it creates situations that we can exploit.

However, RIA methods still account for more than half DPC's sales, because of growing markets in developed countries where labour is cheap. Even in developed countries, RIA technology maintains a market among health authorities and clinical outlets wary of investing in expensive new technology at a time of great uncertainty over funding.

Two significant financial operations took place over the year: the takeover of DUMEZ-GTM, previously 50%- held by GTM-ENTREPOSE, and now fullyowned; and the exchange bid with JEAN LEFEBVRE which led to an increase in our shareholding from 52% to 96%.

Consolidated book turnover, which included oolv 50% consolidation of DUMEZ-GTM for the first half, stood at FRF 38 billion, a slight decline compared with proforma turnover for 1994. Manufacturing and electrical activities advanced, while offshore operations declined by almost 50% year-on-year, as predicted. The building and civil eogineering subsidiaries in France also recorded a slowdown in activity, in light of the persistently unfavorable economic climate.

At January 1, 1996, the consolidated order book was down by 3% compared with its level at January 1, 1995.

Income from continuing operations was down 12% compared to the 1994 proforma figure, as a result of a decline in interest income due to the Group's lower cash reserves and the less favorable average rate of return on investment.

All sectors made positive earnings contributions except for real estate, which recorded losses of FRF 145 million, the same level as in 1994.

The Group's share capital rose from FRF 2.7 billion to FRF 4.6 billion following the takeover of DUMEZ-GTM and the exchange bid with Jean LEFEBVRE mentioned above.

At the Annual General Meeting to be held on June 11, the Board of Directors will propose an unchanged dividend of FRF 8 per share (FRF 12 tocluding tax credit). with an option to receive the dividend in shares. The dividend will be paid on a total of 14,654,624 shares, from the previous total of 9,640,117.

The Board will also propose the renewal of the terms of the following Directors at the meeting: Mr. Jean-Louis BRAULT, Pierre DELAPORTE, Roland GIRARDOT, lerome MONOD and Claude PIERRE-BROSSOLETTE, as well as the appointment of Mr. Francis GUTMANN and The Group's operating income held firm MOBIL OIL FRANÇAISE to the Board of Directors.

GE sees record annual earnings

General Electric, the US manufacturer, increased its earnings by 11 per cent in the first quarter to $1.5bn, on sales up 13 per cent at $17.1bn. The company said that, based on these results and the outlook for the rest of the year, it expected record earnings for the whole of 1998.

Earnings per share, boosted by share buy-backs, rose 12 per cent to 91 cents. GE said it had purchased $897m worth of shares in the quarter, bringing the total to $4.1bn 16 months into a $9bn, three-year buy back programme.

Sales were up in 10 of the group's 12 divisions, led by GE Capital, the TV network NBC and power systems. Sales were lower in the transportation division, which makes railway engines, after a particularly strong quarter last year.

Sales were also down in plastics, as a result of weakness in commodity products. However, better sales of high-end plastics resulted in higher operating profits for the division Seven of the 12 divisions raised operating profits, led by

NBC and plastics. GE Capital raised its earnings by 12 per cent to $650m. Cash generated from operations rose from $500m to $1.2bn. GE said this was due mainly to the success of programmes instituted several years ago to speed the passage of inventories through the system, or so-called inventory

Overseas growth lifts McDonald's

Bad winter weather in the US kept people off the streets and bit US operating profits at McDonald's in the first quarter, the fast food chain reported yesterday. But strong overseas growth enabled the company to turn in a robust 11 per cent increase in net profits to $312.2m overall, excluding a $16m pre-tax charge for an accounting change, and the shares edged up $% to $47% in early trading.

in the past few weeks McDonald's shares have fallen sharply from their February high of $54%, partly because of worries about the effects of the weather on first quarter profits and partly because of fears that the company's international earnings would be hit by the dollar's recent rise.

In the latest quarter, US operating profits fell by 4 per cent but international operating profits shot ahead by 15 per cent. Mr Michael Quinlan, chairman and chief executive, said the company's performance was "impressive" in the face of tough competition in the US, the severe weather, and weak economies in several international markets.

Mr Quinlan said the company's accelerated expansion was continuing as the company sought to increase market share. During the quarter, 129 restaurants opened in the US and 187 opened elsewhere, including two new countries for the company - Croatia and Western Samoa. "Convenience is a critical driver of sales, as more than 70 per cent of all decisions to eat at quick service restaurants are spur-of-the-moment," Mr Quinlan said. Richard Tomkins, New York

Dean Witter held back

Sharply higher provisions for credit card loan losses dampened an otherwise strong first-quarter performance from Dean Witter, Discover, the securities firm and consumer credit

First-quarter net income rose from $222m to $246m, with fully-diluted earnings per share op from $1.28 to $1.41. Earnings from the credit services division, which runs the Discover and other credit cards, fell from $132m to $124m because of an 83 per cent increase in provisions for loan losses from $206m to $376m.

Mr Philip Purcell, chairman and chief executive officer, said the network of retailers which accept the Discover card would now accept the group's range of Novus cards, opening the way for Dean Witter to issue new cards. He said: "There will be more cards to come, including co-branded cards and affinity cards." The securities division increased earnings from $90.1m in the first quarter of last year, and from $116m in the last quarter to $122m, making it the sixth record quarter in a row. Commission revenues grew 28 per cent to $301m on higher equity turnover and increased mutual fund sales, while asset management fees rose 12 per cent to $276m. Investment banking revenues jumped 66 per cent to $65m due to higher

Weak petrochemical products prices hit Nova's first-quarter profit hard, although the natural gas pipeline businesses contributed more. Overall, the Canadian petrochemicals group earned C$97m (US$71.52m), or 20 cents a share, up slightly from the final quarter of 1995, but down from C$247m, or 51 cents, a year earlier. Revenues were C$1.1bn against C$1.2bn. The contribution from Nova's 25 per cent toterest in Methanex, the methanol producer, dropped to C$1m from C$52m a year earlier.

Polyethylene volumes were up 23 per cent year-on-year. A 3-5 per cent price increase on March 1 in North America beld, and a similar increment is due on May 1. Nova and Union Carbide plan a new C$825m ethylene plant in Alberta.

COMPANIES AND FINANCE: THE AMERICAS

Upbeat trend continues for US drugs companies

Warner-Lambert and Schering-Plough became the latest US drugs companies to report strong sales growth in the opening months of this year, contributing to a rebound in enthusiasm for drug stocks on Wall Street yesterday

Warner-Lambert's sales of $1.83bn were 14 per cent higher than a year before, while Schering Plough's reveones climbed 13 per cent to $1.4bn.

Drug companies' shares rose across the board after some recent weakness, led by Warner-Lambert, which climbed $3%, or 2.8 per cent, to $118%, and Schering Plough, which rose $1%, or 24 per cent, to $59. Eli Lilly rose $2%, or 5 per cent, to $58%.

The rebound at Warner-Lambert, which was foreshadowed in an opti-mistic presentation to analysts earlier

Those advances came in the wake of this month, follows a year in which the company's operating earnings per share had slipped 6 per cent. In the first quarter, by contrast, its underlying earnings per share rose by 5 per cent because of the sales growth and a recovery in its US confectionery business.

The stock market's recent enthusiasm for Warner-Lambert has been fuelled in large part by hopes for two pharmaceutical prodocts which have yet to receive regulatory approval: Troglitazone, a treatment for diabetes sufferers, and Atorvastatin, a choles- share were up 23 per cent at $1.84. terol lowering agent.

Between them, these two could eveotually generate sales of more than $1bo a year, said Mr Arvind Desai, an analyst at Mehta & Islay in New York. This would greatly boost the company's drug sales, which were

$2.8bn last year. Due in part to a gain from the sale of a business and other one-off events, Warner-Lambert's after-tax earnings rose by 25 per cent in the first quarter, to $356m, while earnings per

Schering-Plough's higher sales were driven by Claritin, the anti-histamine which is the company's biggest-selling product. The drug registered a 49 per cent increase in sales, to $237m. Sales of Introo A rose 30 per cent, to $120m.

The company's net income of $327m was up 17 per cent on the year, while earnings per share rose 19 per cent to 89 cents. Results in the 1995 quarter included a loss of $6m, or 2 cents a share, from discontinued operations.

Appla's recent strategy of winning market share by drop-ping prices "frankly hasn't worked", says Mr Amelio. Moreover, the company has lost focus on its customers and become too enamoured with technology for its own sake.

Apple has "tried to do too much...too many products, too many programs, too much of everything - except investing in the future," he says, in the first public acknowledgment that Apple's renowned research and development efforts have been unfocused. "We have too many products with unacceptably low profit margins, excessive product complexity and excessive product line complexity."

Apple's gross profit margin fell from about 15 per cent of revenues in the first quarter to 9 per cent in the second quarter, far below its typical 20 per cent rate.

The "high-achieving Apple employees" have been leaving the company in unprecedented numbers, according to executives at other Silicon Valley companies. Apple's workforce oow numbers about 15,500, down from 17,200 at the end of 1995. About 650 jobs have been cut so far this year, Mr Amelio said, and the remainder - more than 1,000 people - have choseo to leave the company.

The initial thrust of Mr Ameho's turnround plan for Apple is to liquidate certain assets and cut costs by outsourcing various operations. Mr Amelio will not specify what might be subcontracted, or what assets are to be sold, though earlier this month Apple announced plans to sell its production plant in Fountain, Colorado, and Mr Amelio says job cuts will total about 2,800 this year oo top of those lost in

WOOLWICH RECORDS A STRONG FINANCIAL PERFORMANCE

Addressing the 148th Annual General Meeting of the Woolwich

"...a strong financial performance during 1995 despite intense competition in our key markets."

Building Society held yesterday, Chairman, Sir Brian Jenkins reported:

This resulted in:

RECORD PRE-TAX PROFIT OF £333 m GENERAL RESERVE INCREASED TO £1.67bn

ASSETS INCREASED TO £28bn REDUCTION IN BAD DEBT PROVISIONS

UNDERLYING COST TO INCOME RATIO DOWN TO 47.3%, FROM 49.1%

Pointing out that the U.K. housing market had failed to show signs of recovery during the year, Sir Brian referred to gross and net mortgage lending, of £3.1bn and £929m respectively, as a "significant achievement". He drew attention to the diversification strategy undertaken by the Woolwich in recent years, selecting five subsidiaries for special mention:

WOOLWICH INSURANCE SERVICES (General Insurance) The Woolwich became the first building society to move into the direct provision of insurance services

WOOLWICH UNIT TRUST MANAGERS (Unit Trusts) Increased managed funds from £325m to £410m with 78,000 investors by year end

With reference to the Society's conversion and flotation, he said: "The conversion project is progressing well, according to the plan and timetable. We are working closely with the Building Societies Commission and The Bank of England. Conversion will not change the Woolwich's traditional values, as we approach our 150th anniversary. They have provided the foundation of our success and will continue to do so in the years to come. Conversion will provide the means, operational flexibility and structure to advance into a changing world as a strong, independent company serving our millions of customers."

International Nickel Study Group forecasts balanced market in 1996

By Kenneth Gooding, Mining Correspondent

The world nickel market would be broadly in balance this year. the International Nickel Study Group said yesterday. It added: "1996 and 1997 look attractive from a producer vantage The announcement was taken to be "mildly bearish" by analysis at Macquarie Equities, part of the Australian banking

Given that London Metal Exchange nickel stocks have fallen by 11.256 tonnes so far this year, this implies a sur-plus during the rest of 1996," Mr Jim Lennon and Mr Adam Rowley pointed out in their daily Commodities Report.

Looking further ahead, the INSG said its survey of industry developments indicated relatively little new production capacity was scheduled to come into operation between this year and 2,000. Increases from existing and confirmed new projects would add 100,000 tonnes of annual mining capacity and 50,000 tonnes of refined nickel capacity.

These calculations did not includa prospective developments such as Voisey's Bay in Canada and several proposed projects in Australia for which feasibility studies had not been completed or had not been given the go-ahead. It suggested, however, that Voisey's Bay could be producing 122,000 tonnes a year by 2000.

The INSG said its latest data showed nickel demand in the western world last year jumped by 21 per cent, sparked by record production of stain-less steel, the biggest con-sumer of the metal. "We see the nickel market taking a pause in 1996," it added. Global nickel consumption in 1995 was 981,000 tonnes, according to the INSG's latest data. Production was 917,000 tonnes of refined nickel, giving supply deficit of 64,000

The INSG's membership includes companies accounting for 90 per cent of global production and government representatives from countries cent of consumption.

'Dead sea scroll' shows signs of life

Canute James reports progress on implementation of the Law of the Sea Treaty or years cynics referred to it derisively as the "dead sea scroll". The protracted and inconclusive negotiations about implementing the Law of the Sea Treaty appeared to be proving them right. Now, bowever, its supporters are claiming a victory. The latest round of negotiations have ended with agreement on the composition of the council to run the International Seahed Anthority, the specialised UN agency that will implement the treaty. There has also been agreement on the politically sensitive post of ISA secretary general. This has cleared the way for the authority to begin work on monitoring the exploitation of minerals from the international seabed, determine the commercial operations of miners and to adjudicate in disputes.

The objective is to provide the machinery for the administration of the resources of the deep seabed, which are the common heritage of mankind, and the development of those resources so that the internetional community as a whole may benefit from them," says Mr Satya Nandan of Fiji, the ISA's secretary general. At the centre of the 13-year debate in many sessions of the United Nations Law of the Sea Conference are thousands of billions of dollars worth of

The way is now clear for the International Seabed Authority to begin monitoring the exploitation of minerals from the international seabed

With the resources of the international seabed having been declared the "common heritage of mankind" by the UN industrialised and developing countries have been locked in arguments about who would will benefit from deep seabed mining. The majority of the UN members were concerned that, lacking the technology for seabed mining and the money to finance it, they would have no share of the wealth. Industrialised countries feared that the ISA and its organs could be controlled by governments and would not adhere to market principles. With these concerns, the composition of the 36-member council to run the authority was a major issue over the past two years. The deadlock was the UK and the US, will represent the major importers and consumers of seabed minerals China, France, Germany and India will represent the major investors in seabed mining. Producers of seabed minerals are represented by Australia. Chile. Indonesia and Zambia while the concerns of developing countries will be represented by Bangiadesh, Brazil, Cameroon, Nigeria, Oman and Trinidad and Tobago.

"This is a complex system of representation," admitted Mr Nandan, "It has the various interest groups represented, and also ensures equitable geo-graphical representation. The system is designed to provide secure rights to seabed miner als, and to balance that with the interests of the authority, will be established to adjudicate disputes over seabed mining among states and companies. The authority and the Enterprise will be located in Jamaica, while the tribunal will be in Hamburg.

The participation of landlocked countries in sea-bed mining and in the benefits of mining, and the effect that unbridled exploitation of seabed minerals could have on land-based producers, bave been among the main concerns of traditional producers. A flooding of markets and depressed prices would be to the datriment of land-based producers. These will have recourse to the ISA's tribunal and also to the World Trade Organisation. Efforts to limit disruption of the trade in minerals will tion plans include an estimate of the maximum quantity of minerals to be produced each year. Land-based producers who are adversely affected by seabed mining may also be entitled to compensation.

Despite the breakthrough at its latest meeting, the ISA still faces some uncertainties. Although the treaty has been ratified by several industrial countries, with others such as France, Japan and the UK promising to do so by the end of this year, the US appears still to have reservation about the possibility of government influence outweighing com mercial operations in seabed mining. A Republican victory in this year's US presidential election will further set back US involvement, said delegates

The active participation of major countries is also important to the funding of the Seabed Authority. Its budget, to be drafted by Mr Nandan's staff, will be based on funding from the UN for two years. After that funding will come from members, based on the UN contribution scale. "Countries such as the US are major contributors to the UN," said an official of the Organisation, "The participation of these states in the ISA is very impor-

to the ISA meeting.

Ukraine expects a better grain crop year after the disastrous harvest of 1996, the agriculture ministry announced yesterday. It forecast grain production at 39m tonnes this year, up over 7m tonnes from last year. when the harvest was the lowest in over a decade.

Analysts are sceptical about the recovery being that dramatic, given the inherent shortcomings in the farming economy, largely unreformed since the Soviet Union's collapse ended the intricate central planning arrangements. The projection also may be premature as winter wheat. which makes up most of the wheat crop, remains to be harvested. Moreover, not all the spring crops have been planted, delayed by continuing cold weather in eastern

"Maybe it's possible, but my bet would be you wouldn't get grain production above 35m tonnes" said an agriculture economist at the World Bank.

Yields and production have been falling since the late inputs are blamed for the drop 1980s. Last year's 31.9m tonne grain harvest marked a nadir. The Kiev government, pressed to keep a tight budget and liberalise the economy, this year plans to purchase 5m. tonnes of grain. State contracts covered half the harvest just two years ago.

The government's with-drawal from agriculture lets farmers better choose their suppliers and buyers, getting market prices. But many farmers depend on the state credits, a lifeline drying up quickly.

German rate cuts boost European sector

By Richard Lapper in London and Lisa Bransten in New York

The Bundesbank's cut in interest rates yesterday triggered strong performance by shorter-dated government securities, with yield curves steepening throughout mainland Europe.

Europe also outperformed the US, where Treasuries were hit by new signs of stronger economic activity. At same time the strength of the dollar. at least until the late afternoon in Europe, helped France and the high yielding European markets outperform Germany, with 10-year yield spreads over bunds narrowing in.

Analysts said that the rate cut had also helped underpin convergence trades. By promoting the prospect of interest rate cuts elsewhere in Europe and increasing the chances of economic recovery, the cut would help increase fiscal revennes and help governments meet the Maastricht criteria for monetary union, they

■ The German market was buoyed by the rate cuts, with the June 10-year futures surg-

reflecting weakness in the US Treasury market, settling at 96.39, up 0.16.

In the cash market the benchmark 16-year bund, 6 per cent due 2006, gained 0.02, outperforming its US equivalent which fell by \(\frac{1}{2} \) by the European close. US bonds are now yielding 23 basis points more than their German equivalents. a rise of 7 basis points on the day. Ms Phyllis Reed, European bond strategist with BZW, pointed to actual decoupling with the markets moving in opposite directions but said: This is a trend which cannot continue for long." Short-dated bonds performed particularly strongly with the spread between two and 10-year securities rising by 10 basis points. At Liffs the June euromark future settled at 96.84, up 0.06.

Mr Stuart Thomson, chief international economist with Nikko Europe, said the curve steepening indicated that the markets did not expect another cut in interest rates. "Had they expected another rate cut to follow you would have seen a early afternoon at Liffe. Prices longer and," he said. Mr later drifted back slightly, Thomson argues that there is Thomson argues that there is room for a further cut, predicting another 50 basis point reduction in the discount by France, Spain and Italy. The short end of all three markets were bolstered by this prospect yesterday. At Matif, June Pibor settled at 95.99, off the day's high of 96.02, but still up 0.15. Yields on French benchmark five-year paper fell by 10 basis points, compared with a 5 basis point fall in the ten-year sector. OATs still significantly outperformed bunds, with the 10-year yield spread falling to 9 basis points, compared with 12 at Wednesday's close. Spreads between two and 10-year paper in Italy and Spain widened by

Buoyed by the early strength of the dollar, 10-year maturities of the high-yielders also outperformed Germany, with 10-year yields spreads for Italy rate in late September or early and Spain contracting 14 basis points to 393 points, and 15 basis points to 274 basis points, the release of figures showing strong gains in manufacturing respectively.

■ The UK also outperformed Germany, with the 10-year spread of gilts over bunds nar-rowing 5 basis points to to 174. At Liffe the June long gilt settled at 105%, up & However, against the European trend the yield curve flattened slightly. Analysis attributed this to the limited scope for further interest rate reductions in the UK. Although the markets shrugged off the impact of fig-ures for the PSBR for March, supply does seem to have been a factor in what analysts said was a poor response from investors to an issue of some £400m of index-linked gilts.

More worries about inflationary pressures sent US Treasury prices lower in early trading yesterday. Near midday, the benchmark 30-year Treasury was off ½ at 89½ to yield 6.831 per cent, while at the short end of the maturity spectrum, the two-year note fell is to 100 s, yielding 5.967 per cent. The June Treasury bond future was off & at 109. The Bundesbank's interest rate cut helped bonds post modest gains in early trading. but prices started falling after activity in the Philadelphia Philadelphia said its index of business jumped to 17.3 in April from negative 0.1 in March. That is the highest fig-ure for the index since October of last year.

But the report was not all bad news for the bond market The prices-paid component rose to 13.7 while the prices-received component fell to negative 6.7, suggesting higher input prices are not being translated into higher final

The dollar also exerted downward pressure on the bond market early yesterday as it lost ground against the D-Mark and the yen. In early trading the US currency was changing hands for Y105.82 and DM1.5030 compared with Y108.24 and DM1.5062 late on

Hewlett-Packard keeps up rush of dollar paper

By Corner Middelmann

Another steady stream of new issues hit the market yesterday, featuring several more dollar deals and two large asset-backed issues.

Keeping up the recent rush of short-dated retail-targeted dollar paper, Hewlett-Packard Finance launched $200m of three-year bonds yielding 8 basis points over Treasuries. While this was seen by some as tight, joint leads Margan Stan-ley and Nikko said that the issue saw good demand from Swiss retail investors who traditionally favour US corporate

A $150m five-year bond from unrated UK sweetener and starch company Tate & Lyle received a warmer response, partly because of its 50-basis-point spread over gilts. Lead manager UBS reported strong demand from UK institutions, which were slowly returning to the market after being sidelined in recent weeks.

Another deal that appealed to UK investors, albeit more retail-oriented, was 6. £150m issue of three-year bonds for BNG, the Dutch municipal bank. "It's the first time in at least a year that a triple-A rated borrower is tapping the three to five-year sector," said an official at lead ABN Amro

ackard keeps -Bundesbank move triggers European rate cuts

By Philip Gawith

The dollar yesterday made fairly limited gains after the Bundesbank surprised markets by cutting its discount rate by 50 basis points to 25 per cent. The German decision prompted a number of copy cat moves ecross Europe, with Austria, Belgium, Denmark and the Netherlands cutting their key lending rates by a similar margin. Conspicuously, the Swiss and French national banks left their rates on hold. The dollar rally in Europe soon petered out, but New York traders later took it higher again. It finished in London at DM1.5121, from DML5073. Against the yen it closed weaker at Y107.47, from

The dollar's rally was capped partly by profit taking, and also by the belief in some quar-ters that it probably marked the end of the rate-cutting former was the Italian lira, notwithstanding the finely balanced weekend elections. It finished at L1,040 against the DMark, from LL045.

Sterling finished slightly firmer against the D-Mark, closing at DM2.2795, from DM2.2737. Against the dollar it closed at $1,5075 from $1,5065.

The Bundesbank's decision to cut the discount rate while leaving the repo rate unchanged was well received by analysis. Ms Alison Cottrell, analyst at Paine Webber, and one of a very small minority to read the Bundesbank's hand correctly, said the key issuewas that the bank wanted to reintroduce a variable rate the repo rate to 80 basis points. the Bundesbank has given itself, plenty of room for a steady downward - ratchet, hence cooling speculation that the easing cycle is over. Ms Cottrell said the bank's mistake, unlikely to be repeated. after the last rate cut in December, had been to allow the repo to fall too fast. This in turn had turned the market too soon to wondering when the next discount cut would come. Ms Cottrell speculated that the speed of the decision yesterday indicated that it might have been agreed at the previous meeting, but held over until after Easter.

· Although the rate cut was justified in terms of the posi-tive inflation and money supply outlook, the trigger may well have been the very modest wage settlements agreed recently. The cut will also help the economy recover by main-taining downward pressure on the D-Mark, thus improving

Consistent with the recent relentless pressure from senior Bundesbank officials for a weaker D-Mark, Mr Hans Tietmeyer, the president, said he welcomed the normalisation of the dollar rate. He added:

"That doesn't have to be the vous about the outlook for the lira and Italian assets after the alection. Mr Stephen Yorke, analyst at SBC Warburg in London, said he gave the highest probability to a centre right majority in the Lower House. He said: "In the short term the market thirsts for clarity of the political situation and any result that offers the prospect of a 1-2 year government with-out the need for constant interparty haggling will probably be greeted favourably."

Goldman Sachs believe a right wing victory led by Mr Fini would initially be bad for markets, but calculates that there is a 65-70 per cent chance of an outcome that is not negative (no clear majority, or left wing majority). Evec in the event of a right-wing victory, Mr Filippo Cartiglia, analyst at Goldman, says: "It is not obvi-ous that the size of a right wing victory will be big enough to result in lasting new policy changes that damage the Lira against the weak D-Mark background, a crucial part of any analysis of the election's relevance." A related issue which has reemerged is whether and when the lira should rejoin the European exchange rate mechanism. An early re-application would be expected should the left wing coalition prevail.

Last week Mr Lamberto Dini, the outgoing prime minister said the "right price" for reen-try is around LL,050 against the D-Mark. Some of Italy's trading partners are likely to find this level too generous, "Fair value" for the lira is probably

LONDON STOCK EXCHANGE

FT-SE Mid 250 races up to another record high

By Steve Thompson, UK Stock Market Editor

Takeover speculation, one of the main driving forces behind the London market's move to record levels. reached fever pitch yesterday.

"Even if we do not get a bld tomorrow. the market is bracing itself for a burst of takeover deals." said one senior trader.

The list of candidates grew much longer, with Lucas the market's latest favourite to attract the attentions of a predator. Turnover in Lucas expanded rapidly throughout the session.

Even without the preoccupation with bid stories, the stock market was buzzing with activity. Wednesday evening's 70-point setback in the Dow Jones Industrial Average was offset by the 50 basis points reduction in Germany's two key

At the close, the FT-SE 100 index was left with a 15.1 gain at 3.820.7. almost wiping out Wednesday's setback. The market's premier index was easily outpaced by the FT-SE Mid 250 index, which spiralled upwards throughout the day to register its fifth successive record high. It came within 6.4 of the 4.500 level. eventually ending the session a net 29.5 ahead at 4.493.6.

Over the past seven trading days the Mid 250 index has climbed 116.5, or 2.6 per cent. Over the same period the FT-SE 100 has gained 62.1, or 1.6 per cent.

This morning is expected to bring plenty of fireworks in the marketplace, with dealers looking for a sharp run-up in share prices ahead of the expiry of the FT-SE 100 index option. Some said 3,850 on the Footsie was easily achievable. But they warned that the index could well fall back post the exptry.

Turnover in equities continued to be unusually high, reaching 970.6m shares by 6pm. Non FT-SE 100 stocks accounted for around 60 per cent of the overall figure. Customer business on Wednesday was valued at a hefty £2.11bn.

Traders said Goldman Sachs, the US investment bank, was again one of the biggest players in the market, executing more exceptionally heavy trades across the market and adding to perceptions that the bank is running one of the biggest trading programmes for many months. The market's confident close was in sharp contrast to its early performance, which saw marketmakers lower their opening quotations to bead off attempted selling in the wake of Wall Street's sharp slide overnight

But the mood quickly turned positive as dealers picked up the first of the takeover rumours which swept the market, and also began to scent

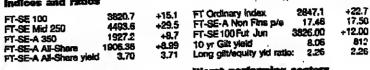

a German rate cut. The day's economic news, inflation figures and the public sector borrowing requirement for March, caused little unease around the trading desks. News of the German rate cuts saw the Footsie surge to the day's high of 3,828.0 before easing back and finishing the session around 7 points off the day's peak.

Takeover targets included Pearson, Thorn EMI, Ladbroke and London Electricity. Another story was that Standard Life, the Scottish mutual, was considering the sale of its 30 per cent stake in Bank of Scotland, which is scheduled to report preliminary figures next

Airbus boost for Lucas

Lucas Industries shot ahead in beavy volume on a combination of trading bopes from increased Airbus production. bid talk and fading rumours of problems with a big order from Volkswagen.

Cazenove was recommending the stock and Henderson Crosthwaite was said to be pushing the Airbus story. Lucas is a big supplier to the aircraft maker and Airbus yesterday forecast that deliveries would increase by 37 per cent to 185 in 1997. All this plus persistent takeover talk saw the shares, down 11 on Wednesday, rebound by more than 10 per cent, climbing by 20 to 224p in 18m traded, the heaviest turnover since February 1995.

London bid buzz

In a high voltage week for the power sector it was London Electricity that was plugged into the bid-rumour machine yesterday.

Marketmakers said Houston Industries, of the US, was poised to launch an offer valuing the stock at 9000 a share. This was backed by talk that one regional broker, which has been astute in its timing and choice of Rec shares recently, was in the market picking up London Electricity stock.

The speculation was considered by one analyst to be little more than a case of "rounding up the usual suspects". But others said there was a plausible logic. Houston previously showed an interest in the sector when it made a joint bid for interest rates.

There was also what one spe cialist salesman called the "panic factor". Mr Matthew Siebert of ABN Amro Hoare Govett commented: "You can lose or make a huge amount of money by not having stock on the book, or having too much. Marketmakers want flat books at the moment." The change in sentiment at top conglomerate Hanson gathered pace, pushing the shares smartly higher and lifting turnover to 38m, the day's best known to be fingering change of stance buttons ahead of the are mulling a move from hold

There was also talk of corporate activity in the pipeline and a general upgrading of sum of parts calculations. The latest merger flurry in the power sector has put the spot-light on Hanson's Eastern Electricity unit. As a result. break-up estimates for the

Disappointing figures from a aurvey on the food retailing sector hit J. Sainsbury, sending the stock sharply lower. The sbares fell 7 to 365p, making it the worst performer among FT-SE 100 constituents. in a busy session that brought turnover of 9.3m.

Figures from research group Taylor Nelson AGB revealed a 1.3 per cent decline in Sainsbury's share of the package grocery market in the four weeks to April 7. Market watchers had expected the figures to show a slight improvement for Sainsbury and were disappointed particularly in the light of figures for arcb rival Tesco showing a slight improvement. Cable and Wireless, a strong market all day, moved into overdrive in the final hour of trading. The shares shot to the ton of the Footsie rankings with a gain of 24 at 546p and

National Power rose 10 to 588p, supported less by stake building than hot money from arbitrageurs.

The retail sector stayed buoyant, with Laura Ashley jumping 16 to 180p following Ms Ann Iverson's first full set of results, which were ahead of expectations, since she took over as chief executive. One analyst said the company was showing signs of recovery. although it was "early days". Nat West Securities believes the shares have "enormous upside potential and retains its 'buy' recommendation. although Panmure Gordon has kept its 'sell' advice.

However, several brokers believe some of the main stocks in the sector to have run too far in recent sessions. One who takes that view is Mr Mike Prew Of Panmure Gordon. Surprise move by Buba fails to ignite bourses

FRANKFURT was taken off guard by the Bundesbank's decision to cut the discount and Lombard rates by 50 basis

However, the surprise factor did not translate into a rally in the Dax as realisation dawned that the cut could be the last in the current cycle. The Dax index, which was hovering around 2,520 before the announcement, moved to 2,535.52. In the Ibis the indicator closed at 2,524.18. The Bundesbank lowered the discount rate to 2.50 per cent from 3 per cent and the Lombard emergency financing rate to 4.50 per cent from 5 per cent. The repo was to be kept fixed at 3.30 per cent for at least the next two weeks.

The Bundesbank said the decision to reduce official interest rates, for the first based on a favourable inflation outlook. The move takes the discount rate back down to its record low seen in the first half

If the work of six can be done by four and a cheap machine, the successful company must buy the machine and lay off two of its employees. The logic is inescapable to all but the most blinkered flat-earthers, or so the argument goes.

Yet the use of accounting systems that focus on minimising costs and staff comes under attack in a recent book, Transforming the Bottom Line, by Tony Hope and his brother Jeremy. Both are accountancy experts: Tony is visiting professor of accounting at Insead, the French business school, and Jeremy is a chartered accountant.

In one example they show how concentrating on eliminating wasted or unnecessary work and costs could bring greater savings than aimply cutting headcounts. They make the point that "bridget holders who are rewarded on their ability to born rithing." ability to keep within agreed spend-ing levels have little incentive to cess. The net result is a huge wasted opportunity."

Doing more with less is at the heart of many of the human resource policies of the past few years. Theoretically, the savings are instantly translated into increased profitability, but the authors demonstrate how cost-saving employment measures can backfire.

They contrast, for example, the employment approaches of Sears Roebuck and Wal-Mart, two US retailing giants. When profits and sales growth at Sears began to slip during the 1980s, management responded with cost-cutting pro-grammes, including the shedding of 33,000 non-sales jobs with projected savings of between $600m and $700m a year. But overmanning was not at the heart of the company's Customars complained that poorly trained and uncommitted sales staff could not provide the level of service they had come to expect. The reason for this could be charted back to changes in com-pany employment policies during in an effort to minimise staff costs.

The policy proved to be a damaging false economy, leading to higher staff turnover, less training and demotivated and uncommitted employees. In 1969, say the authors, 119,000 jobs changed hands in the Sears Merchandise Group. The $900 estimated cost of recruiting and training each employee equated to $110m in the year.

hen Sears surveyed its stores it found that those with the highest staff turnovers had the least satisfied customers. Wal-Mart, in contrast, grew not just because of its clever stock management, but also because it used fewer part-time and temporary employees than any of its competitors. Wal-Mart sales staff benefited from local knowledge and continuity of employment.

Frederick Reichheld, of the Bain consulting group, stresses in his book The Loyalty Effect the potentially harmful consequences of allowing accountancy practices relying on measurement to comporate strategy. Most accountancy techniques focus on the more easily messured areas such as the value delivered to investors.

Measuring employee value is more difficult but it is possible and. arguably, of equal importance. The quality of the employee base is a critical driver of competitive advan-tage, writes Reichheld, yet very few companies monitor such statistics and hardly any include them in their annual reports. When will accountancy begin to treat people as the assets they undoubtedly are? Transforming the Bottom Line is published in the UK by Nicholas Brealey Publishing, £18. The Loyalty Effect is published in the US by Harvard Business School Press, $24.95.

 The quarterly index of advertised demand for executives compiled by MSL International, the recruitment consultancy, presents a picture of continually rising demand since the middle of 1993. The full picture, however, is not as simple as it looks in the graph featured (right), according to Garry Long, MSL group chairman. It may be masking, to some extent, changing patterns of recruitment and employment. Long points to the greater use by employers of consultants, temporary managers and fixed-term contracts to give them more flexibility in dealing with skill shortages or budgetary constraints, "bence the seeming flood of demand for top people, he says. While interim management is a big growth area, it cannot account for the whole of the increase in demand. What must also be considered is the expansion of small and medium businesses, many of which are contemplating taking on specialists, such as information technology managers, for the first time.

It would be interesting to know how much of the the new demand covers permanent positions. The whole concept of permanency also seems to be undergoing an overhaul. An employer, unwilling to commit itself to a full-time job may advertise a temporary post, realising as trading conditions improve that there will be a continuing need for the post. In these circumstances, the advantages of flexibility from short-term employment may be eclipsed by the risk of losing a good employee who does not harbour any long-term commitment. Newton's law, which says for every action there is an equal and opposite reac-tion, should not be ignored.

EXECUTIVE SEARCH & SELECTION

Group Finance Director Designate

A new role at the heart of a changing business

c.£60,000 + benefits Midlands

A unique personal challenge . . .

You are looking for the next stage of development in your career. You want a role that will grow with you; a role that you can mould around yourself; a role that offers you change, challenge, real responsibility and the chance to influence corporate development. We are offering that

A unique corporate agenda . . .

The appointment of a new CEO and the introduction of external investors are the drivers for a period of major change. We aim to maintain our entrepreneurial and competitive culture whilst improving the focus of our businesses, our people and our information and IT systems. We're already the largest company in our sector of the metals production and trading business; through corporate acquisitions, business restructuring and the reengineering of the way we manage the group, our ambition is accelerated growth and increased profitability

A challenging role . . . As our group head of finance, you will work closely with the Chief Executive and the management teams of our subsidiary companies. You will have full responsibility for the group's financial affairs - controls, reporting, cash ent, treasury and secretarial. You'll be a key player in acquisition review and integration; in the assessment of capex and you'll drive the integration of systems across the group. But - we want to be honest with you - we don't believe in big head offices and, in the early days, we'll expect you to work with little support in a truly 'hands-on' manner.

For a commercial candidate . . .

Your fast track career to date is based on an immersion in management accounting and a consequent understanding of what the figures really mean, substantial experience at operating company level as well as corporate centre, proven ability to manage subsidiary finance staff at arms length and a record of surviving with a small head office team. You will be closer to our ideal if you bring systems and banking skills, international exposure and evidence of competitor analysis - extending to acquisition investigation. If you've done all this in a metals or commodities environment, even better!

To take this forward write to our advising consultant, Mark Hartshorne, quoting reference D/0080 and enclosing full career and remuneration details. Prove to us that you have the potential we seek.
